

Mob suspect denied bail

By DANIEL HAYS

Daily News Staff Writer

A judge has refused to release accused racket boss Michael Franzese and his alleged "enforcer," Frank Castagnaro, from jail, ruling the community would not be safe if they were granted bail.

Franzese has been in the Metropolitan Correctional Center in Manhattan since December, when he and eight others were named in a lengthy racketeering indictment that charged they raked in $5 million using fraud and threats to pull off complicated financial schemes. An April 7 trial has been set.

Brooklyn Federal Judge Eugene Nickerson found there was evidence that Franzese, 34, of Brookville, L.I., had ordered Castagnaro to arrange the 1981 beating of Thomas Trimboli, who had evicted Franzese's car dealership from a lot Trimboli owned in Hempstead, L.I.

Nickerson said that Castagnaro, 40, of Amityville, L.I., had hired William Reese to beat Trimboli.

Nickerson's decision found that only Franzese had a motive for the assault and that his attorney had represented Reese after his arrest. Franzese lied when he took the stand and testified he had not paid Reese's bail, the judge ruled.

Nickerson noted that besides auto dealerships, Franzese was connected to 20 corporations involved in businesses including movie production and gas distribution. Franzese is facing a 177-count Florida indictment for a gasoline scam.

Franzese also "corruptly controls" the Allied International Union, the nation's largest private security guard union, Nickerson found. The judge cited secret FBI tapes in which Franzese told former Allied President Anthony Tomasso, "This is my union. You do what I tell you to do."

Franzese's lawyer said he is considering an appeal.

Witch doc in Rio will treat ill hero

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

RIO DE JANEIRO—An Amazon witch doctor flew here from Brasilia yesterday, toting forest plants and hallucinogenic drugs and hoping to save an eminent ecologist from the poison of a fluorescent jungle frog.

Ecologist Augusto Ruschi, a national hero famous for defending hummingbird forest reserves against lumber and paper interests for more than 50 years, said he is slowly dying after handling the palm-sized dendrobata frog, whose skin exudes a poison used to tip Indian hunting arrows.

Raoni, the plate-lipped witch doctor-chief of the Txucarramae Indians, said he will treat Ruschi for three days this week.

"I will," he said, "smoke a lot and dream . . . (Ruschi) will be taken in charge by the spirits of my dreams. I will leave my body, take the atorokon root, pulp it and put it in hot water.

"Then, I will beat the scientist with the root and put drops of the liquid in his eyes."

DENTAL LOGIC

Dr. Philip Howard, Forest Hills, N.Y.

DENTAL CARE FOR THE APPREHENSIVE PATIENT

General dentistry with general anesthesia. The fear of dental treatment, or dental phobia, is neither unusual nor abnormal. It is also increasingly more treatable. Today, one can avoid the pain and anxiety of dental treatment and have virtually pain-free dental care with the use of general and/or intravenous anesthesia.

Although they may not be common, some individuals in the following categories may require dental care with general anesthesia; for example, very young children, physically handicapped individuals, chronic dental sufferers, and adults who are extremely sensitive to dental pain. For all these people, and many others, the use of anesthesia is a safe comfortable method of achieving the goal of dental health.

Our staff understands and respects people who need dental care with general anesthesia. Therefore, there is no need to be embarrassed about long dental absences or lack of care. We are available...not to judge...but to help.

We believe that each patient has specific needs. Our office philosophy is to meet the patient so that we can understand each individual dental problem prior to treatment. Therefore, we recommend that the first appointment be a consultation visit, with no treatment, unless emergency care is required.

It is our hope that our specific training, along with our 20 years of experience, will give each patient the ease and confidence to complete this new phase of dental health care.
