Iowa, ISU reps say they'll vote 'no' to cuts

Most of the proposals are expected to be approved, but the measure to reduce the maximum number of athletic scholarships has become controversial.

Critics claim if the proposal is enacted, it could violate the federal Title IX statutes requiring equal treatment of women in athletics as well as state civil rights laws or state equal rights amendments.

"We believe that some schools like Iowa would be placed between a rock and a hard place," said Christine Grant, University of Iowa women's athletic director. "They would have to chose between complying with NCAA rules and state laws. That's a no-win situation."

Grant also said schools should look to reduce spending in other areas such as recruiting before they begin to limit the availability of a college

Bloom: Probe has helped me attract clients

NEW ORLEANS, LA. (AP) -Lloyd Bloom, who with partner Norby Walters has paid thousands of dollars to college players in violation of NCAA rules, said he isn't worrying about being a target of a federal grand jury probe in Chicago.

"This whole thing has enhanced our business," Bloom told the New Orleans Times-Picayune and the States-Item newspaper. "It hasn't hurt us. Kids, major stars, are calling us to be with us.

Bloom admitted that World Sports' Entertainment Inc., the agency he and Walters run in New York, paid Grambling wide receiver Calvin Nicholas $7,500 during the 1986 college season. New Orleans Saints' 11th-round draft pick Arthur Wells, a former Grambling tight end, said agent Terry Bolar paid him and Grambling teammates Sean Smith and Joe Williams.

"The publicity hurt us a little at first, but now we have no problem," Bloom said. "Other agents are jealous of us. They are sleazeballs. Ex-jocks and accountants. They are meaningless to me. Gnats. I will not be defeated by small-time guys in polyester suits."

Bloom, 27, said that the grand jury has subpoenaed neither him nor

"They have nothing on Lloyd Bloom. I'm innocent," Bloom said. "Why should I sweat it? I paid a few college players. That's not breaking the law."

Because of a series of unusual incidents involving players who were associated with WSE, the grand jury is investigating whether Walters and Bloom became agents of violence as their empire crumbled.

Among the incidents:

• The shooting death of a man driving a car belonging to former WSE client and SMU tailback Jeff Atkins on March 6 in Dallas.

 Alleged threats by Bloom, which the newspaper reported Bloom denied, against former SMU wide receiver Ron Morris.

 Alleged threats by Walters to two unidentified former WSE clients.

 The March 16 stabbing and beating of agent Steve Zucker's business associate, Kathe Clements, in Skokie, Ill. Zucker, who is the agent for Chicago Bears quarterback Jim McMahon, signed three former WSE clients, including Detroit Lions No. 1 pick Reggie Rogers.

education to talented students who might not be able to attend school otherwise.

"We could all live with reduced recruiting budgets if we all lived under the same rules," said Grant. "But this proposal would keep some students out of school who would otherwise

Fewer Scholarships

Under the reduction proposal, every collegiate sports program offering scholarships would be allowed to award fewer grants to prospective athletes.

For example, the scholarship limit on all men's sports except football, basketball and ice hockey would be reduced by one. Ice hockey would be reduced by three. Football and basketball already had scholarship limits reduced.

Scholarship limits for women's sports also would be reduced by one except in track/cross-country and swimming. Scholarships for women runners would be cut by three and for swimmers would be cut by two.

"The biggest problem is that it simply hits hardest on women's sports and several programs where minorities excel. It is out of proportion," said Grant. "It simply will deny scholarship-paid college opportunities to the disadvantaged."

Grant said the proposed reductions would hit hardest on women's programs. After years of discrimination against spending for women's athletics, such action is wrong, Grant said.

"Since Title IX was enacted, we have been making strides and kept the balance between men's and women's programs. This would reverse that," Grant said. Negative Votes

Grant said Iowa would vote against the measure and expects other major colleges to vote against it.

David Knight, chairman of the Iowa State Athletic Council, said it is likely the school's delegates to the convention will vote against cuts if they are considered in one vote.

"If they are divided, we might be able to support in one or two sports that have little relevance to us,' Knight said.

Last January, the commission called for the special convention to consider measures to reduce the costs of operating athletic programs and to reduce the pressure on athletes who also are trying to get a college educa-

A number of the initial proposals suggested by the commission, however, set off controversy, even among commission members.

As a result, the convention's focus has changed from cost reductions to beginning an 18-month national discussion of the role of intercollegiate athletics.

Top Priority

Of the 43 changes to be considered at the special convention, scholarship reductions are considered a top priority among commission members.

"You can say they believe this proposal is very important," said one NCAA staffer, who asked not to be identified. "They will certainly press for the reductions to be approved."

NCAA officials also dispute claims that the cuts would violate federal

They said analysis of the proposal shows that the NCAA is only imposing limits, not ordering the schools to provide a certain number of scholar-

Guerrero races to Budweiser 200 pole

By The Associated Press

PORTLAND, ORE. Guerrero raced to his second straight pole victory, setting a track record Saturday while earning the top starting spot for today's Budweiser 200 Indy-car race.

Guerrero broke the track qualifying mark of 115.988 mph set by Mario Andretti in 1984 and moved up to a fast lap of 116.439 mph.

Then he held on as Brazilian Emerson Fittipaldi, who won the 1986 pole, began closing in.

"We improved a little bit, but still not enough," said Fittipaldi, who finished at 116.078 mph, the only other competitor to surpass the elder Andretti's record.

"You made me sweat those last few laps," Guerrero said to Fittipaldi during post-qualifying interviews. "I didn't relax at all the whole session."

Third was defending CART-PPG series champion Bobby Rahal at 115.813 mph, Michael Andretti and his father.

The race is scheduled to start at 3

Woman hurt when car hits workers' platform

ELKHART LAKE, WIS. - An Illinois woman was one of four corner workers injured when a car spun out of control and hit a platform during practice for the June Sprints sports car race.

Peggy Keller of Skokie, Ill., was listed in critical condition at Milwaukee County Medical Complex. She was awaiting surgery late Saturday.

Three other workers received minor injuries.

The accident occurred when a sports car driven by John Lloyd of Chicago, Ill., broke down in the third turn. Lloyd's car spun and hit a guardrail, then spun back onto the track and around the guardrail before crashing into the platform. Lloyd was unhurt in the crash.
