NCAA delegates reject presidents' cost-cutting proposals

Issues at a glance, Page 6-E By David Davidson College Editor

DALLAS - Major colleges dealt the NCAA Presidents Commission a resounding defeat Tuesday, turning down proposals to cut costs and voting to maintain the status quo on scholarship limits and the size of football coaching staffs.

In fact, delegates to the NCAA's special convention made a stunning about-face and restored two basketball scholarships per team that had been eliminated at a convention in January.

The NCAA billed Tuesday's session as an effort to deal with cost containment, but in the end the votes were solidly behind cost sustainment. The outcome resulted in the first substantial setback ever for the 44member Presidents Commission, which was established to reform college athletics.

"We made a mistake," said Presidents Commission chairman John Slaughter, chancellor at the University of Maryland. "We shouldn't have come here with specific numbers in mind.

"I wouldn't say it is frustrating. But it is disappointing. You have to be realistic. There are issues here that are very important to a lot of people."

Some delegates — who were made up of athletic officials, coaches and faculty representatives of the schools - even questioned the necessity of the convention.

"Our people figure it cost about $1.8 million to put on this cost-cutting convention," said Dave Gavitt, commissioner of the Big East Conference. "How many baseball scholarships would that pay for?"

Efforts to reduce football and non-revenue scholarship ceilings for Division I-A football from 95 to 90 was defeated 69-39 after coaches Joe Paterno of Penn State and Tom Osborne of Nebraska recommended against it.

Division I-A also balked at reducing from nine to eight the number of full-time assistant football coaches.

"We want to get away from a band-aid approach to solving our problems and give ourselves an opportunity to study this more carefully," said Paterno.

The most shocking development was the restoration by a 164-124-7 vote of the Division I basketball scholarship ceiling to 15.

Jim Valvano, the basketball coach and athletic director at North Carolina State, said the cut to 13 in January "was done somewhat in haste. It was more of a knee-jerking reaction to what appeared to be a mood to cut costs at every level of college athletics."

Two bulldogs battle it out

LONDON - Protocol calls for the players to face the royal box and bow to the occupants. This is Wimbledon, after all, where for all we know the fossils in charge still believe there is an Empire. Such folderol is not only tolerated, it is demanded — and players accept the duty as a harmless remnant of the monarchy.

Some days they have it backwards here. Some days the folks in the royal box should bow to the players. Tuesday was such a day. Instead of Jimmy Connors and Mikael Pernfors facing the 28 varieties of royalty with an odd wing-commander and admiral tossed in for leavening - the royalists should have come down from their aerie at the end of the court and said, "May we, pretty please with sugar on it, carry your rackets to the changing room? And may we then drive you to your home? It would please us so." For on this Tuesday, Mikael Pernfors, who learned his royal etiquette at the feet of Sir Dan Magill, the knight errant of Athens, Ga., and the majestic Jimmy Connors played a tennis match for the ages. Connors won it, but Pernfors didn't lose it.

Nearly four hours of solid hustle

They played three hours and 40 minutes. They hit every shot known to man and then some. Pernfors hit one between his legs. Connors created a touch halfvolley from the left sideline that landed an inch from the right sideline. They landed drop shots from the backcourt, they retrieved overheads speeding out of town. Pernfors' wristy backhands from deep off the court were masterpieces of the artist's creative instinct.

Connors is no relic, but at 34 neither is he a kid, and midway through the fifth set he needed a trainer to spray cold stuff on a stretched thigh muscle. For months now, Pernfors has worked on a bad foot that has set back his conditioning; he is maybe five pounds overweight and he has lost maybe a half-step of court coverage.

But for nearly four hours, beginning in the sun, winding up in the shadows of the Centre Court stadium, they worked at tennis so grand you wished it would never end. "He's a fighter, he'll stay in there and dig and grind it out," Connors said of Pernfors, and Pernfors said of Connors, "He's such a great hustler that if he gets an opportunity to come back, he'll take it."

That Pernfors was in against Connors is testimony, once again, to the strength of the University of Georgia tennis program. Two years ago, Pernfors won his second straight NCAA singles championship and helped Dan Magill's team to the team championship after choosing to stay in school rather than go pro. "A scholarship sight unseen," Magill said of his recruiting of Pernfors, taking no credit for the magic to come.

Magill saw 'something special' in Pernfors

Out of Sweden because he didn't measure up to the Jarryds and Wilanders there, Pernfors first went to Seminole Junior College in Florida where the coach, Larry Castle, recommended him to Magill. "My co-captain in '81, Paul Groth, clinched it by recommending Mikael, too," Magill said.

"The first time I saw him play," Magill said, "was in our boot-camp, two-a-day drills. I told our coach, Manuel Diaz, 'This boy's going to be our No. 1 player.' The next day, Mikael was really hustling and trying to make a good impression. I told Manuel, 'This fella's something special. He's good enough to win the

"He was not only a hustler, he could make shots. He didn't have as much power on his backhand as on his forehand, but his very best shot was that fake drive and topspin lob off the backhand."

LONDON - What began with the polite hush of embarrassment at Centre Court ended with the thunder of awe Tuesday, for Jimmy Connors created the most memorable rally of his tennis career to defeat Mikael Pernfors 1-6, 1-6, 7-5, 6-4, 6-2 and move into the quarterfinals at Wimbledon.

"A helluva deal," Connors said. "Phenomenal, huh?" And not without earned pride. Not only did he lose the first two sets, he was down 4-1 in the third. And after escaping there, Connors then was down 3-0 in the fourth set.

But the old man refused to go gentle into that good night. He wouldn't even admit to being surprised at winning. "I can still play," he said. At age 34, trying to become the oldest Wimbledon champion in half a century, Connors conjured one more time the bulldog genius of his youth. As Pernfors said in weary explanation of the magic, "He's known for doing things like that. He just raised his

If any top player ever came back so far at Wimbledon, students of history here can not recall it. Connors once lost a semifinal to Bjorn Borg after winning the first two sets, but Borg had not suffered at 6-1, 6-1 as Connors did this day.

"I didn't have time to be embarrassed, I was getting my butt kicked," Connors said. "I didn't do anything bad at the beginning, I was just getting beat. ... 6-1, 6-1 is a pretty good spanking."

But the 15,000 spectators on a crystalline summer day watched the proceedings with respectful silence usually reserved for funereal occasions. As brilliant as Pernfors was early on - inventive with every shot, so quick he covered every inch of the lawn - any Centre Court applause was perfunctory. This seemed such a disaster for Connors, the proper Brits didn't want to make it worse by cheering Pernfors exuberantly.

There would come time later, much later, for unbridled enthusiasm. The time would come after Connors hit a hundred crackling groundstrokes Pernfors could only watch. The time would come after Connors, pain in his right thigh, limped through the last set.

"I'd have finished this match," he said, "if I had to crawl."

The time would come. But only fools, and Jimmy Connors, believed it when Pernfors led 3-0 in the fourth set. Perhaps 10 minutes from defeat, Connors instead won five straight games, twice breaking Pernfors' serve. It was glorious tennis. Pernfors was gallant. The little Swede, who won two NCAA singles championships at the University of Georgia, once returned a lob by chasing it down and striking the shot between his Jimmy Connors battled back from a 1-6, 1-6, 1-4 deficit for a five-set win over Mikael Pernfors that put him in the Wimbledon quarterfinals.

Braves 5-2 Braves Notebook, Page 2-E Bradley on Hoyt, Page 3-E By Gerry Fraley Staff Writer SAN FRANCISCO - Life with six runs a game was enjoyable for the Atlanta Braves. Life with a back-to-earth version of their offense is dragging them

sputtering

As the springs and cogs come flying out of their offensive machine at an alarming rate, the Braves lost 5-2 to San Francisco Tuesday night at Candlestick Park. The loss guaranteed a horrendous California trip.

The Braves are 2-6 for the trip, which concludes with Wednesday's 4:05 p.m. game. They have scored just three runs on nine hits in two games against the Giants but have one win because of Zane Smith's shutout Monday.

Lack of offense has caused the downfall. The Braves have scored just 20 runs on this trip. A month ago, the Braves were averaging 5.8 runs per game.

They have 25 runs in their last nine games and are 2-7 in that stretch. At the same time, the Braves have fallen from 21/2 games behind West leader Cincinnati to six games off the lead.

"We're in a lull right now," manager Chuck Tanner said. "We have to have everything going just right, and we're having a few problems. But that'll They had a last chance to save this game. With two runners on base in the eighth, pinch-hitter Ozzie Virgil had a 3-0 count against reliever Scott Garrelts. Virgil, however, popped up a full-count pitch to end the inning. The Braves scored their runs on homers by Dion James, two pitches into the game, and Glenn Hubbard, to start the fifth. Each homer gave the Braves a one-run lead, but starter Doyle Alexander could not hold the advantages. In six innings, Alexander lacked his usual precise control. He walked a .195 hitter, left a pitch high in the strike zone for a .191 hitter and made other mis-

The Giants scored their final run against Alexander (4-3) in the sixth to go ahead 3-2. With one out, Chris Brown singled and Chris Speier put him at third with a double. Ahead in the count at 1-2, Alexander could not strike out Bob Melvin, who drove a high pitch to center field for a sacrifice fly.

The Giants played without two of their regulars: catcher Bob Brenly and second baseman Robby Thompson, who is 9-for-13 lifetime against Alexander. Both were held out of the lineup because of injuries.

Alexander did not take advantage of the situation and hurt himself with several poor pitches.

The worst of the lot came in the third. Alexander walked Matt Williams,

Walters case unlikely to benefit guilty schools

By Chris Mortensen Staff Writer

College athletic programs that have been corrupt in recent years are less likely to be considered victims of fraud in the ongoing federal investigation of New York-based agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom.

Sources close to the investigation say the U.S. Attorney's office in Chicago has questioned athletes about whether they received money from their school or from anyone connected to the school, such as an athletic booster.

If U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas determines that a college program was itself guilty of unethical practices, such as paying players, he probably will be unlikely to focus on charges involving the Probe could aid 'clean' programs in suits agents and that school, sources said.

Schools with "clean" programs could benefit most from the investigation involving Walters and Bloom, the sources said. They said the "benefit" will come because schools could seek damages in subsequent lawsuits against Walters and Bloom for the agents' alleged and admitted dealings with players who had eligibility remaining. "Legally, a so-called corrupt school could still be portrayed as a victim, but strategically it would not be a good tack," said a source close to the investigation. "If a university was directly involved in paying a player, or looked the other way, it would be much more difficult to get a jury sympathetic to that

At least two schools, Alabama and Pittsburgh, are considering legal action against the agents for making their players ineligible. Alabama lost star basketball center Derrick McKey for his senior season, and Pittsburgh recently lost two football players, running back Charles Gladman and defensive back Teryl Austin, because they had signed contracts and accepted money from Walters and

"We've got a number of legal people looking at the situation," said Alabama athletic director Steve Sloan. "We'll pretty much wait and see what happens in Valukas declined Tuesday to answer questions and said he would not even acknowledge there is a grand jury investigation. The FBI and U.S. Attorney began their investigation of Walters and Bloom in late March, and the case moved to the grand jury on May 19.

The grand jury that is hearing the case meets each Tuesday in Chicago, and it is not expected to issue indictments until late August or September.

are considering charges of fraud, mail fraud, wire fraud, extortion and violation of the RICO (Racketeering Influenced Corrupt Organizations) Act against Walters and Bloom, sources have said. Some athletes have been told that they might be indicted on charges of tax evasion and fraud.

Valukas and Assistant U.S. Attorney Howard M. Pearl are trying to prove to the grand jury that the agents and the athletes were co-conspirators in defrauding the universities, according to sources. They cite terms of the scholarship agreement between the athletes and the colleges. Each year, athletes are asked to sign certification documents, stating that they have not violated the scholarship terms.

Pittsburgh officials took a more serious approach to the certification procedure. Two months ago, upon hearing rumors of Pitt athletes involved with Walters and Bloom, they asked their football players to sign certification documents that were notarized. Pitt sources say that Gladman and Austin each signed the notarized documents. Recent investigations that led to their ineligibility revealed that both players took money from Walters and Bloom last September.

Walters has said he does not consider his practice of signing athletes with eligibility remaining illegal or unethical. Walters said he believes that agents and colleges historically have been paying athletes.
