1987 Dallas Morning News When the curtain rises on the 74th Tour de France today, last year's understudy will be the lead player in the U.S. effort to win the prestigious cycling event.

Andy Hampsten, 25, from Boulder, Colo., will lead the U.S. assault on the European classic. Hampsten, who finished fourth last year riding in a supportive role for American Greg LeMond and Benard Hinault on the French La Vie Claire team, will be racing to win the yellow jersey of the overall race leader for 7-Eleven.

Hampsten surprised the cycling world earlier this year when he left the powerful French team to join 7-Eleven. In doing so, Hampsten cut his salary in half, but is the leader of a developing team, rather than a hired hand on a French powerhouse.

And 7-Eleven has a team doctor who makes sure there is American food for the team at each stop.

"That's a major difference," Hampsten said. "In France, contrary to popular belief, the food that we're served isn't that good. It really helps us to have a solid

Critics say Hampsten and his upstart 7-Eleven teammates are at best long shots to win the '87 tour. The critic with perhaps the best outside opinion of the young American is LeMond, Hampsten's mentor last season. Although LeMond, still recovering from an April 20 accidental shooting, isn't granting interviews, his father, Bob, would share his son's opinions of Hampsten.

"Greg thinks Andy's definitely got the talent," the senior LeMond said. But last year's winner, the first American to win the French tour, doesn't think the 7-Eleven team has the strength to keep Hampsten in contention | Cedar Falls 12, Northern University until the race's mountain stages, where the 5-foot 9-inch, 135-pound racer excels. He also questions 7-Eleven's Central Decatur 10, East Union 4 preparation for the race.

Last Thursday, less than a week before the Tour de France, Hampsten defended his title by winning the Tour de Suisse, something LeMond said was poor preparation for the more important race. Last year there was a twoweek rest between the Swiss and French tours. "This year it's too close, he'll be too tired," LeMond said.

Despite his criticism of the team's preparation, even LeMond recognizes 7-Eleven's rapid rise in stature since it formed an amateur cycling team in 1981.

"7-Eleven is doing it their way and they're doing it well," he said.

ball, golf, tennis, track and volleyball. Limit on the number of days football teams can have practice in pads during the 36 days of spring football. During those days, coaches will be allowed to have only 15 days of contact. Division II schools voted to reduce the total number of allowable football scholarships to 40. Division I-AA schools voted to reduce annual scholarship awards in football from 30 to 25 and reduce full-time football coaching staffs by one.

As a result of the lack of progressive action, many officials complained bitterly that at least part of the convention was a waste of time and money.

"In retrospect," said Jim Delaney, commissioner of the Ohio Valley Conference, "this was a strategic mistake. In some ways, it really was a waste of time and money."

"If you don't write and ridicule not only this organization, but the Presidents Commission, which brought us here . . .," said an angry Father James Loughgran, president of Loyola Marymount University. "I spent two days here and for what?"

But John Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland and chairman of the NCAA Presidents

Big Ten hasn't reviewed film of '86 Rose Bowl: Duke

By TOM WITOSKY Register Staff Writer

DALLAS, TEXAS - Big Ten Conference officials have met twice in recent weeks with federal prosecutors in Chicago investigating possible corruption among athletes and sports agents. But Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke said Tuesday his office has not reviewed any game film of the 1986 Rose Bowl game between Iowa and UCLA.

"I just don't know where they got that about us looking at films. It isn't true," Duke said during an interview at the NCAA special convention here. But Duke said he has been unable to tell if the game is under scrutiny.

Recent published reports have said the Big Ten and Howard Pearl, the assistant U.S. attorney spearheading the investigation, have reviewed film of UCLA's upset of Iowa. Rumors about possible point shaving have circulated consistently since it was learned that federal law enforcement officials were investigating the activities of sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom.

A host of former and current college athletes, including former lowa running back Ronnie Harmon and defensive back Devon Mitchell, were represented by the two New York agents and received improper payments from them. Both Harmon and Mitchell received money from the agents while they were members of the Hawkeye team that won the Big Ten championship in 1985 and lost the Rose Bowl on Jan. 1, 1986.

Pacific 10 Conference Commissioner Thomas Hansen said he has no knowledge of any inquiries about the game. U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas, who met with Duke and Pearl, declined to comment.

MONEY TALKS. Few officials took the recommendation to abolish bowl games and the Final Four Tournament very seriously, and money is

why. Jim Brock, executive vice president of the Cotton Bowl, told the delegates the bowls paid $46.5 million to schools in 1986, which he said was $5.5 million more than the year before. "In the last three years," Brock said, "we have paid schools $127 million and in the last 10 years, we have paid them $280 million. NCAA officials also report the Final Four Tournament generated an additional $45 million for the NCAA and its members. DISCIPLINE POLICY. University of Iowa officials will study the possibility of establishing a new policy of dealing with athletes accused of criminal behavior. "There is some concern about what we can do," faculty representative Bonnie Slatton said Tuesday, "but we know that it must be reviewed." New momentum for a policy comes in the aftermath of the recent arrests of all-American wrestler Brad Penrith on intoxication and disorderly conduct charges and lowa defensive back Keaton Paul Smiley on assault charges.

USA WRESTLING. Efforts to bring USA Wrestling, the sport's national governing board, to Des Moines, Ia., from Stillwater, Okla., are going well, but it will be weeks before Drake officials find out if they remain in the running. Drake Athletic Director Curt Blake, who is spearheading the effort, said he and others are continuing to solicit Iowa corporations for financial assistance. 'We've had some good success, though it is premature to talk much about it," he said. USA Wrestling will choose its new headquarters from among Des Moines, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Kansas City and Colorado proposals were rejected, particularly the proposals on scholarship reductions," Slaughter said. "At the same time, this was a significant convention because we have started to look seriously and openly at our problems and how we can build consensus to resolve them."

Slaughter also rejected any notion the Presidents Commission, which has led the reform effort, had lost prestige or credibility among NCAA | Cascade 9, Anamosa 0 members. "We have never tried to be | Dyersville Beckman dominant as some have suggested. That is not our real role."

Instead, Slaughter said, the commission is continuing to involve collegiate chief executives within the

Lack Of Communication

"Our biggest fault has been that we | Sergeant Bluff-Luton 17, Kinglseyhaven't communicated our concern well enough to our colleagues,' Slaughter said. "But that can be rectified during the next several months."

Walter Byers, executive director of the NCAA, also suggested that the convention not be judged too harshly. He said the organization has begun an 18-month examination of the central problems of collegiate athletics.

The biggest surprise occurred Tuesday when NCAA Division schools voted to restore the maximum number of basketball scholarships to 15.

Last January, NCAA members voted to cut the number to 13, but the action drew strong criticism from basketball coaches, who claimed it would not save money and would hurt the quality of play and practice.

Initially Tuesday the proposal was rejected, but was revived after intense lobbying by supporters.

The issue, according to several proponents, was not whether to reduce costs. It was one of fairness. "After we rejected cutting football scholarships, it would have been a little unfair to reduce basketball too, said Kaiser.

"Basketball is at its zenith, revenues are at their highest, and fan following at a fantastic level," said Vic Bubas, commissioner of the Sun Belt Conference. "We should do nothing to those elements that has made basketball so special."

But Byers and others argued that eventually NCAA schools will have to confront reducing their scholarship levels or base the assistance on need.

"To save money in the most effective way, there will have to be changes in financial aid," Byers said during a news conference following the session. "The question is whether there will be fewer scholarships or will the money go to those who need it the most.'

In rejecting overall scholarships in non-revenue sports, delegates heeded claims by various women and minority groups who claimed such action would penalize them unfairly.
