Sports agents need Big Ten's OK to deal

CHICAGO, ILL. (AP) - A lawsuit filed against sports agents Norb Walters and Lloyd Bloom has been settled with an agreement the two will not sign eligible Big Ten Conference athletes without notifying the league and school involved.

Bloom, whose dealings are being investigated by a federal grand jury empaneled in Chicago earlier this year, said the agreement was "meaningless" because he now is concentrating on representing Hollywood entertainers instead of athletes.

"That's fine with us," said Byron Gregory, an attorney representing the conference. "Our concern was always that when agents deal with student-athletes, that they not jeopardize their eligibility or break any rules."

The consent decree also requires the agents to turn over to the conference all original documents pertaining to their past contacts with ath-

The Atlanta Constitution, in a story Wednesday quoting unnamed sources, said those documents will reveal that Walters once paid for a New York trip for the mother and sister of star running back Lorenzo White of Michigan State.

The Constitution said the NCAA already has cleared White of wrongdoing in that incident because he did not make the trip, did not accept money and did not sign a contract with the agents.

fight — his father never allowed it he saw his father fight for his life.

Ken Sr. had driven his sports car over the side of an on-ramp of a Los Angeles freeway. The car hurtled down an embankment and crashed to a stop. He was cut out of the car by the fire department.

He was in the hospital operating room for three hours as doctors tried to piece him back together. Only because he was in such good shape, doctors said, did he live through it.

Ken Jr. slept on the floor of his father's hospital room each night for a week after the crash, watching him each day for a sign of improvement. Even with his father unconscious, Ken Jr. talked to him. He told him to be strong.

When he finally brought his father home, Ken Jr. literally nursed him, leaving his side only for school and football.

He pushed him for hours in his wheelchair, providing both physical and emotional support.

Not Fully Recovered

Ken Sr., 44, still has not fully recovered, but he has made amazing progress. There are bits of his skull still lodged in his brain. His memory is hazy, his voice raspy. There is occasional numbness on the right side of his body.

Yet he works out regularly with Ken Jr., 21, drawing on his son's strength. His weight, which dropped from 240 pounds to 190 after the crash, is coming back. His bones have healed.

"Now, he is my motivating factor," Ken Sr. said from his home in Capistrano Valley. "We were always close, but we grew even tighter when he saw for the first time that I was human, that I could be hurt. After the accident, I needed him. And he became the man I always knew he would be."

Ken Jr. was 18 months old when his parents divorced. Ken Sr. was given custody. He raised his son carefully, shielded him from the shady fight world he knew too well.

Ken Jr. was just 6 years old when his father, a relatively obscure fighter, broke the jaw of Muhammad Ali in a 1973 heavyweight title fight.

That fight opened doors he never knew existed. He fought for another seven years, but he never quite reached the height he reached when he beat Ali. He retired eight years later when he was knocked out in 54 seconds by Gerry Cooney.

Ken Jr. was at his grandmother's house both nights and no one mentioned either fight.

want me to get caught up in it. wasn't even allowed to watch replays of his fights until I was in my teens. He didn't approve of the sport or the people in it," Ken Jr. said.

"When I got older, and saw the Ali fight on film, it sent chills through my body. I felt like I was part of it. He always said, though, he fought so wouldn't have to."

The only boxing Ken Jr. did was shadow boxing as he fought for his own identity, for release from his father's ever-present shadow.

He found that in football, a sport he didn't even begin to play until his junior year in high school. His father would not allow it any sooner, for fear of injury. He wanted his son to play baseball.

Not Known for Hitting

Even today, Ken Jr. is not known for his fierce hitting, but instead for his great athletic skills and the body he inherited from his father.

At 6 feet 2 inches and 220 pounds, he came to UCLA as a running back and quickly became the pawn in a tug-of-war game by the assistant coaches, all wanting Norton to play the position they coached.

"He could have played anywhere, UCLA Coach Terry Donahue said. 'He could have been a tight end, a running back, anything he wanted. How he plays each week is how our defense plays. That's the impact he

He eventually settled at inside linebacker, leading the team with 106 tackles last season and 119 in 1987.

With Norton clogging the middle, UCLA has allowed opponents just 2.5 yards per carry, which could present serious problems for Florida, which relies heavily on the running of tailback Emmitt Smith.

Norton, though, is coming off a pinched nerve in his neck, sustained against Washington and slowing him the final two regular-season games.

When he was helped off the field that afternoon in the Rose Bowl and taken slowly to the locker room, Ken Sr. was there within minutes. He had been up in the stands.

"Before the accident, my father and I were close, but still a bit distant. He was in charge and I was the son," Ken Jr. said. "After that accident, he needed me. That brought us closer and closer together."

Although Ken Sr. did not make the trip to Hawaii, doctors thought it might still be too much of a strain, the two expect to spend at least part of Christmas Day together. Immediately after the game, Ken

Jr. will board a plane for Los Angeles and then drive to his father's home to celebrate — win or lose.

"The accident changed our lives," "My father never made a big deal Ken Jr. said. "It changed both our
