Knowledge of business key for athletic directors

By TOM WITOSKY

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. - Eight years ago, Craig Patrick played a key role in helping the United States Olympic hockey team pull off one of the greatest athletic feats in the nation's history.

As manager and assistant to Coach Herb Brooks, Patrick helped lead the team to a miracle victory against the Soviet Union, then a gold-medal victory against Finland.

Though still a vivid memory, those days are past for Patrick, as is his six-year stint as general manager of the New York Rangers.

Patrick is in his second year as athletic director at the University of Denver, a Division II school with a major-college hockey program. But don't think this is a time of golf, skiing or relaxation for Patrick. Like any other athletic administrator, there is no time for it.

"I keep finding new issues and problems I have to be aware of," Patrick said. "There is a complexity to being a college athletic director most people don't know about."

New World

What once was the domain of ex-jocks with physical education degrees has become a serious, pressure-packed business.

Instead of the old football coach becoming athletic director, the trend now is for younger, more aggressive businessmen to become sports administrators.

As proof, some 40 athletic direc-

Association of the Collegiate Directors of Athletics.

"The fact remains is that this is a litigious society," Michael Slive, a Chicago sports lawyer, said. "Sports has become a business and lawsuits are a manifestation of the American way of business."

The seminar was the third of three held by the association in its effort to provide substantive educational assistance to those in athletic administration. More than 250 officials attended the sessions, NACDA officials estimated.

athletic departments.

Issues such as drug testing of students, comparable athletic opportunity for women, tort liability, contract law and dealing with agents were among the topics.

All are complex and new to most athletic administrators.

"To be honest, I really wasn't as informed on these issues as I should be," Patrick said. "That's why I am here."

And the issues change. "The one thing that is true about sports law is that it changes very quickly," Wong told the group.

"Own Marathon" As evidence, Wong pointed to last week's Supreme Court ruling against Nevada-Las Vegas basketball coach seminar sponsored by the National review of legal problems facing most Jerry Tarkanian, a court order forcing Kentucky officials to release details of alleged rule violations by the university's basketball coaches, and sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom, who await trial.

BUSINESS ON 5S

"I liken all these issues to be their own marathon when it comes to the law," Wong said. "The problem is that the issues haven't progressed much past the seventh or eighth mile."

But despite such uncertainty, athletic department and other university officials believe they must remain current on legal issues.

Albert Valesquez, counsel for Indiana University, said he was ordered by university president Thomas Erhlich to keep the university from makhave blown through the door and shoved the Shockers into a tiny, unlit alcove in the old-timers wing of the Hall, where they sit forgotten.

Schools like Southern Methodist, Kentucky, Kansas, Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Texas A & M, Houston. ... I could go on, but I have to get to the point soon. The list is as long as Tyson's driving record.

Apparently it is Christmas year 'round: cash, cars, airline tickets, clothes ... anything you want, kids, just tell Coach Santa. Now they're all getting Scrooged. The NCAA be bad! It has unsheathed its terrible swift sword and is dispensing justice like the Queen of Hearts. Off with their scholarships! Die, imperialist dog running backs! Now it's Oklahoma's turn. The Sooners got spanked. They won't be playing in a bowl game for two seasons, won't be on television for one season, and won't be able to give their full allotment of scholarships for two. The scholarship limit is tough. "Scholarship" at Oklahoma is a euphemism, as in, "Hey, man, could you give me a ride home in your scholarship?" But is the NCAA action against Oklahoma fair, unfair, or what? The answer, as usual, is "what." On the bright side, as a friend cracked, maybe this is the NCAA's way of bringing parity to the Big Eight. But, while the sanctions look stiff, forgive me if I have the feeling Oklahoma will bounce back in a hurry. The loss of 14 scholarships over the next two seasons will mean they won't have as many redshirted punters sitting on the bench. The bowl thing may slow down the Sooners a bit, but if the NCAA really wanted crack down on Oklahoma, it would have:

LEXINGTON, KY. (AP) - Joe Hillman scored six points and Eric Anderson added five during a 15-4 run late in the first half Tuesday that carried Indiana past Kentucky, 75-52. It was the first victory in Rupp Arena for Coach Bob Knight. It also was Indiana's fifth straight victory. Kentucky lost at home to Indiana for the first time in 62 seasons.

Hillman began Indiana's decisive streak with two free throws and a basket from the baseline. Jay Edwards followed with a 10-foot field goal for a 27-20 lead with 5 minutes left in the half.

After Kentucky's LeRon Ellis netted a tip-in, Indiana's Eric Anderson slipped inside for two layups, including one that became a three-point play, and Edwards hit a 17-foot shot for 12-point lead with 11/2 minutes

Armstrong says Hawks still strong

IOWA CITY, IA. - You've heard of athletic teams that are down, but not out?

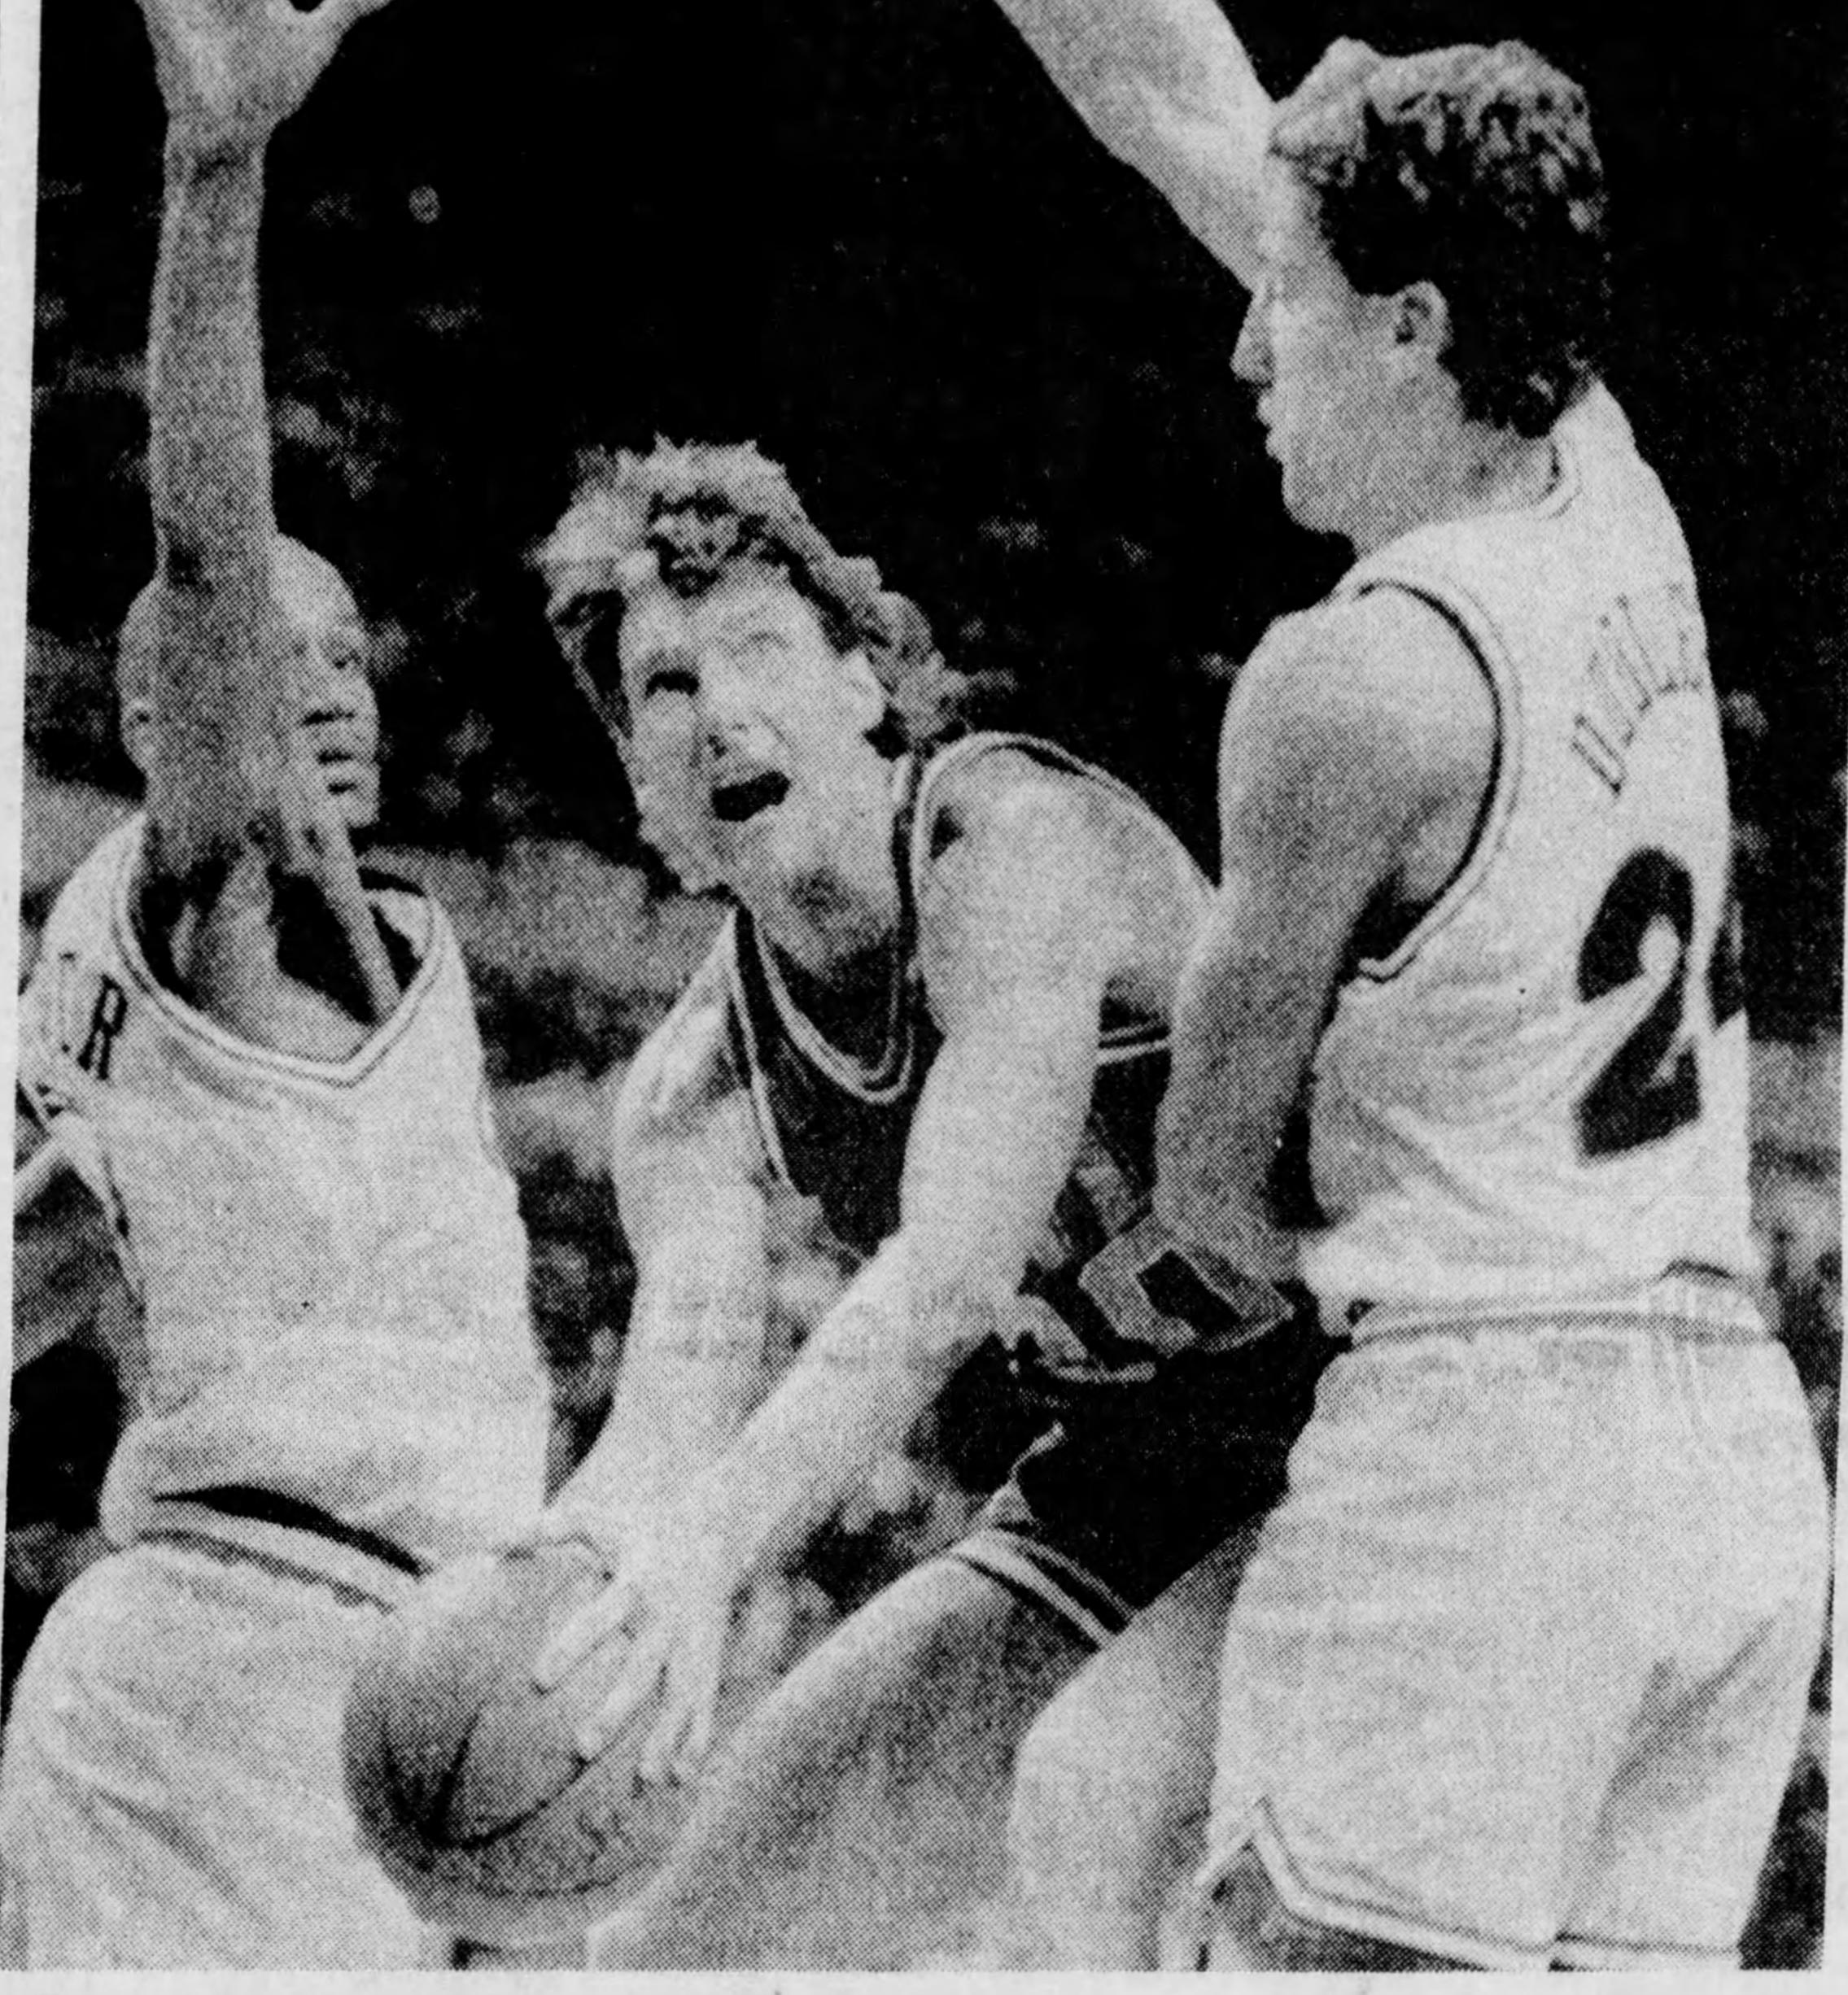

Well, don't classify Iowa's basketball team that way, says guard B.J. Armstrong.

"We're not even down," Armstrong "Things said. haven't changed. We've stuck together psychological-

Yet, the Hawk-ARMSTRONG eye guard is the first to acknowledge that his team has suddenly developed some areas of concern now that forwards Michael Ingram and Matt Bullard are sidelined with knee injuries — Ingram for the season, Bullard until at least late February.

Hey, the NCAA doesn't waste its money. For its next report, it will look into whether students would rather drink beer on Friday nights or take a mid-term exam. The study says athletes spend 30 hours a week on their sport versus only 13.7 on their studies. Big deal. Most students spend 30 hours a week on their hair. Some spend 30 hours a week trying to get a date. Others spend at least that much time playing cards in the student union. I knew students who spent 30 hours a week on a bar stool. At least athletes are spending their 30 hours doing something wholesome and healthy, like making money for the NCAA.

Jackson says he got gifts at Oklahoma

PHILADELPHIA, PA. (AP) - Aformer Oklahoma football player said Tuesday he accepted gifts and money from alumni when he played at the university, but defended it by saying it was part of the game.

"This is a business, and we've got to understand that football is a business," Keith Jackson said. "That includes college football. When you shut down Oklahoma, you're hurting the business all around the nation."

Jackson, an all-America tight end at Oklahoma, is now an All-Pro rookie for the Philadelphia Eagles.

The NCAA placed Oklahoma's football program on probation Monday for three seasons. The NCAA found 20 recruiting violations. The probation bans the team from bowl games for two seasons and live television for one season. It also removed 14 scholarships over the next two seasons. Jackson said there was nothing wrong with violating NCAA rules. He compared it with breaking the speed

Jackson said. "I got gifts. No, nothing like cars or anything like that. If I needed money for a ticket to go home ... an alumni would help me get a ticket. It was nothing really big. Not like they gave me over $1,000."

Jackson said the practice of taking money from alumni was rampant in college football.

"If you're not getting any money, if a guy, an alumni, comes to you and offers money, you're going to take it," Jackson said. "You're not going to say, 'No, that's OK, I don't want it.'

"The rules are stupid. If they applied to everyone, then they would be good rules. But they don't apply to everyone. They only apply to athletes," he said.

Jackson emphasized that, to his knowledge, Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer knew nothing about it.

"Definitely, Switzer didn't know it," Jackson said. "No coach can control that. But he's responsible for things that happen no matter what it is. I call it a mother theory. It's like a child goes out and commits a crime. The mother isn't going to be arrested for the crime that the child commits."

Switzer's response was that the situation is "the difficult thing" about college coaching.

"This is something you can't police," Switzer said. "As long as the He's averaging 19 points, and is one of the three veteran players Coach Tom Davis is depending on for leadership in the wake of the injuries. The others are also seniors - guard Roy Marble and forward Ed Horton.

"I think it's important that none of us tries to do more than he's capable of," Armstrong said. "We've got to do what comes naturally in terms of leadership.

The Drake women swing back into basketball action tonight after a 10day layoff against strong Oregon State in the Drake Fieldhouse at 7:30.

"They are one of the better teams we will face at home this season," Drake Coach Susan Yow said Tuesday. "They are by no means the tallest team we will play this year, but they are good."

Yow said her Bulldogs have looked sharp in practice, which they resumed last Friday. They beat Iowa State, 82-72, on Dec. 11.

Oregon State's top scorers are 5foot 11-inch forward Monica Raspberry (18.9 points per game) and 5-11 | ing. guard Chelle Flamoe (18.4).

strong, and he's so disciplined. B.J. has worked hard to get where he is, and I can't see him failing. I don't think he'll let anything happen to get in the way of his game plan.

"But, although I have no doubt he'll make it to the NBA, I don't know yet what his level of success will be. Can he be an all-star point guard? To do that, he's got to move well without the ball, play defense and rebound. His offense will take care of itself."

Armstrong seems a bit overpowered when he hears the things Davis says about him in terms of his professional career.

"The NBA is certainly in the back of my mind," he said, "but I can't say that I worry about it a lot. I'll watch an occasional pro game on television, and I know that I've got to work on a number of technical things before I try to make it at that level. "I don't think any NBA player does a better job of pushing the ball up the floor than Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers. I also like watching players such as Isiah Thomas and Maurice Cheeks, but every team has a good player at point guard."

The Wolverines had a 50-21 advantage in rebounds against the Division II opponent.

Softball star Garlson dies

Special Dispatch to The Register

CANTON, S.D. - LeRoy Carlson, 62, a member of the Iowa and Des Moines softball halls of fame, died of a heart attack here last Friday. Services were held in Canton Monday.

Mr. Carlson, a right-handed pitcher, was on three Iowa state fast-pitch championship teams during the 1950s and 1960s, Glenn Towers Truckers of Des Moines, the Des Moines Nite Hawks and Gibson Appliance of Sioux City. He appeared in a total of 12 state championship tournaments from 1953 to 1967.

His record included seven no-hitters in state tournament competition. In 1962 Mr. Carlson, playing for Bud's Tavern of Sioux City, pitched a no-hitter in the state tournament and on a single day of that tournament pitched in games that totaled 31 innings. His team finished in second place. In a substate tournament game in 1965 Mr. Carlson struck out 20 batters, a record at that time.

Mr. Carlson last pitched about nine years ago for a Kingsley, Ia., team. He operated a motel here along with his wife, Dorothy. In addition to his wife, survivors are two sons, William Carlson of Kentucky, and Roger Myers of Phoenix, Ariz.; four daughters, Dannell Beavers, Deanna Klameth and Sandra Undine, all of Sioux City, and Valaire Eicker of Prescott, Wis.; and a sister, Loraine Mann of Sioux Falls, S.D.
