English seeking an end to European soccer ban

The English soccer federation plans to ask that its four-year-old ban on sending club teams to the European continent be ended.

The ban was imposed by the Union of European Football Associations (UEFA) in the wake of the 1985 incident in Belgium, during which supporters of the Liverpool club caused a riot that left 39 dead and 450 injured. Further problems involving English fans at the 1988 European Championships dissuaded British officials from even asking for a UEFA vote on the matter last year and led to cancellation of a Nov. 16 "friendly" match between Italy and England.

At next week's UEFA executive committee meeting in Portugal, English federation head Graham Kelly will ask that the issue be discussed in an attempt to reintegrate English club teams into European competition.

There have been no major outbreaks of soccer hooliganism in England this year, although in early March police arrested 24 supporters of the Bolton Wanderers for misdemeanors related to soccer violence over a period of time.

The most serious problem in Europe this season took place in Spain during a match between Real Madrid and Osasuna Pamplona. The entire Madrid team left the field in Pamplona because Madrid goalie Francisco Buyo was being pelted with oranges and pieces of metal. The Spanish federation punished Pamplona by taking away its next three home matches.

career with Boca Juniors, the second club of his career. He's not saying much else these days, having decided to avoid the press after a series of stories in which he criticized the Naples coach.

Which European country has the best record among its continental rivals in soccer? West Germany, according to statistics compiled by the French newspaper, L'Equipe.

Counting matches against European teams in World Cup and European Championship play since 1956, the top five were West Germany, the Soviet Union, England, Italy and Czechoslovakia.

Since 1956, West Germany has won the World Cup (1974) and two European Championships (1972 and 1980) and finished second in three World Cups (1966, 1982, 1986) and one European Championship (1976). (Both events are held every four years).

Most impressive is the West Germans' road record: They are the only European country to have won more than half their road games (14 of 24) in that period. How good is that? France, which made the World Cup semis in 1982 and 1986, had won just 3 of 31 road matches.

France, Switzerland and Morocco are declared candidates for the 1998 soccer World Cup, which will be awarded in 1992. The 1994 World Cup will be in the United States.

The International Track Federation (IAAF)

technical commission will decide in late April whether to recommend overturning a year-old rule that made indoor records the equal of outdoor records in several events.

The events in question are the horizontal and vertical jumps and the shot put. Records set in those events indoors now count as overall world records if the facility meets certain technical requirements, such as level runways. The problem has been in verifying the specifications of the arenas. The only world record affected so far has been the high jump, in which two men have matched indoors the world records that had been set outdoors.

The International Gymnastics Federation (FIG) has approved advertising (in addition to manufacturers' trademarks) on the uniforms, warmups and bags of the athletes in all events but the Olympics. There will be one logo allowed on the uniform and up to two on the warmup and carry bags.

FIG President Yuri Titov of the Soviet Union has been in the U.S. negotiating a new TV contract with the U.S. networks. Included in those negotiations have been discussions about making the World Championships (now held in oddnumbered years) an annual event, save for the Olympic year. The odd-year championships would retain the current format, with team and individual competition, while the even-year championship would be just individual.

After 1991, when the world championships are in Indianapolis in September, FIG would like to shift them to midwinter to avoid the baseball pennant races and football.

Jimmy Johnson, who had been Walsh's coach at Miami, has taken over as coach of the Dallas Cowboys.

Walsh, undecided about his future since last season, said he made up his mind after skipping a workout with permission Monday. He began spring practice with the team to learn what type of offense Erickson planned.

"Coach Erickson has been great through this whole process,' Walsh said. "I'm sure the success here is going to continue in the Walsh said Miami's failure to
