

The King of women's golf

Betsy King, the LPGA's dominant player in 1989, heads elite field for 1990 opener in Jamaica □ F7

Coming Sunday: Recruiting '90

An in-depth look at top college football recruits, plus team-by-team reports from across the South

Sports

SECTION ■

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

* FRIDAY, JANUARY 19, 1990

Clemson lists Ross as possible coach

Mark Bradley

Ford became too big, too fast, in too small of a town

Legend holds that Frank Howard — whose official Clemson University title is simply "legend" — once escorted Bob Hope on a tour of beautiful downtown Clemson. They drove for a minute, whereupon Hope said: "Hey, Frank, when do we get to town?"

And Howard said: "Want me to back up so you can see it again?"

There are lots of cute and curious things about Clemson, S.C., and its football Tigers. The stadium is known as Death Valley. The team enters the valley by busing from the stadium's west side to the east and running down the end zone hill. As they run, the Tigers touch Howard's Rock, a hunk of stone found in Death Valley, Calif., by Clemson grad S.C. Jones and presented to the legend. (Word is that Howard, having no clue what to do with a rock shaped like E.T.'s alien noggin, turned to a subordinate and growled: "Do something with this damn thing." So the dutiful subordinate put the thing on a pedestal and made it an icon.)

NCAA has long wondered about Clemson

Clemson itself is a pretty little place with orange Tiger paws — an innovation traceable to Hootie Ingram, who's known most recently for running off Bill Curry to hire Gene Stallings — painted on the roads and green grass and leafy trees and rolling fields most everywhere else. If Clemson is long on anything, it's space. There aren't many buildings. Aren't many folks, either.

Take away the university and Clemson becomes Winder. The 1980 census measured Clemson's non-student population at 8,118. By comparison, bustling Auburn, Ala., is thrice the size of Clemson, and Auburn even has an honest-to-goodness enclosed mall. Clemson has some gas stations, a few restaurants and a motel or two. That's about it.

OK, I know what you're saying: Here's a big-timer from Hotlanta looking down his metropolitan nose at a puny burg. Hey, I lived my first 18 years in Maysville, Ky., which give or take a stoplight is the same size as Clemson. I like small towns. Indeed, my first impression upon visiting Clemson was that it was heartening to see a small-town school play such big-time football.

Then the old skepticism kicked in, and I thought: Just how is it that a small-town school can play such big-time football?

I'm sure I wasn't the first to ask. The NCAA has wondered for more than a decade. Rival schools point to Clemson as a den of iniquity, the thinking being that few top-shelf prospects would want to spend four years in a two-horse town if all they were getting was tuition, books, room and board. When a school gets (and keeps getting) more and better athletes than logic insists that it should, warning bells clang.

All have protested their innocence

Today the bells in Clemson toll for Danny Ford, the coach who won an improbable national championship at the age of 33 but who resigned Thursday at the school's urging. Clemson has been hit with another full-blown NCAA investigation, its second of the decade, and stands to get hammered again. It's thought that Ford's leaving may stave off the death penalty, much as jettisoning Eddie Sutton did for Kentucky, same as Florida prays dumping Galen Hall and Norm Sloan will do for it.

Naturally, Ford left protesting his innocence. All coaches who quit under NCAA fire take to the highest mountain top to proclaim their rectitude. (The exception is Galen Hall, more a victim of circumstance than a scoundrel.) Sutton and Sloan and Barry Switzer and Charley Pell swore that their programs' many sins weren't the doing of the men in charge.

Doubtless Danny Ford will be saying as much for the rest of his life. But the simple fact that he's gone indicates otherwise. For all Ford's winning, Clemson's elders ultimately came to feel that the football program was about to devour the entire school, sacrificing academics and honor on the altar of football, and that under Ford there could be no true cleanup.

Asked comment, Georgia Tech basketball coach Bobby Cremins said: "Clemson football is too big. Danny Ford got too big." Get too big in too small a place and you dwarf your surroundings. Come the inevitable scrutiny, you're left with nowhere to hide.

School will face NCAA minus Ford

By Tony Barnhart
College editor

Georgia Tech football coach Bobby Ross is one of several candidates under consideration to replace Danny Ford, who was forced to resign as Clemson's coach, sources said Thursday.

Ross, who has a three-year record of 12-21 at Tech but recently completed a 7-4 season, was a longshot candidate last month for the Wisconsin vacancy that has since been filled. He said then, "I'm happy at Georgia Tech."

Ross was on a recruiting trip Thursday in North Carolina and could not be reached.

Other candidates mentioned by sources are Dick Sheridan of North Carolina State, who turned down the head coaching position at Georgia a year ago, Fisher DeBerry of the Air Force Academy, Jimmy Satterfield of Furman and Clemson assistant coach Bill Oliver, who has been offered the defensive coordinator's job at Alabama.

Ford, 41, was forced to resign Thursday under the cloud of an NCAA investigation, the second in his 11-year tenure at the school, but walked away a rich man.

The settlement could come close to $1 million. He will receive $190,000

CLEMSON Continued on F8 ▶

File

Tech coach Bobby Ross (right), shown shaking hands with Danny Ford after Tech's win at Clemson in 1989, is now on Clemson's list of candidates.

Players call for Ford's reinstatement

By Karen Rosen
Staff writer

CLEMSON, S.C. — Clemson football players called on school officials Thursday night to reinstate Danny Ford, who was forced to resign earlier in the day after 11 years as head coach.

In a news conference outside Mauldin Hall, where most players live, junior tight end Stacy Fields read a statement he called a "team decision" while about 30 players stood behind him on the porch.

"We invite the administration to meet with us to discuss the provisions for Coach Ford's reinstatement,"

Fields read. "In the event that we do not come to terms, we would wish to keep this coaching job among the assistant coaches. We want someone who has come through the battles with us and someone who knows how to win, Clemson-style."

Clemson athletics director Bobby Robinson had said earlier in the day he'd be glad to talk to the players. A meeting has been scheduled for today, but Robinson said he was unsure of the time.

"We love Coach Ford ... and we want him to have the best," said Vance Hammond, a junior defensive tackle. "But most of all we want him back. We want him back now."

Nick Lomax, vice president for student affairs, dismissed the possibility of reinstating Ford.

"That's not a consideration as far as I'm concerned," said Lomax. "Reinstatement is not even an appropriate word to use. We're talking about a resignation."

The players' statement said they do not feel they have been given a satisfactory explanation for Ford's resignation and want their futures considered.

The players would not answer questions about what planned to do if their demands are not met.

PLAYERS Continued on F8 ▶

They loiter in hotel lobbies, ride in limos, sometimes bring call girls. Pimps? No . . .

Sports agents doing the Senior Bowl hustle

By Mike Fish
Staff writer

MOBILE, Ala. — The story, as told by a prominent sports agent, is an all-too-familiar tale of greed, unethical behavior and an effort to buy players.

Last month at the Blue-Gray all-star game in Montgomery, Ala., the agent claims a rival from Texas was "giving players $2,000 and $3,000 to sign" with him. Three or four allegedly accepted the money. None is expected to remain with the generous agent.

The same cast of characters — agents and their recruiters — have been decked out in everything from European cut three-piece suits to colorful sweat suits, laboring the past week on the sidelines of the Senior Bowl. Their office is the lobby of the hotel where the players are housed. It is here that they loiter like prostitutes on a street corner, hustling college seniors who figure to soon have their pockets full of NFL dollars.

There are not-so-prominent agents and familiar football names like Pat

Dye Jr. and Ted Marchibroda Jr. There are newcomers like David Levine, 26, and Drew Rosenhouse, a Duke Law School student. All are hustling clients.

They work the house phones, calling players in their rooms. Dinner dates are arranged with potential clients. Hands are pumped and — word has it — on occasion money is exchanged.

"It's almost like going to a bar trying to meet girls," said Atlanta-based agent David Ware, who avoids the lobby scene and says he gets most of his clients through referrals. "They stand around and see somebody they like and say, 'Hi, the next five minutes is going to change your life.' Just crazy stuff."

Dye, employed by Robinson-Humphrey Sports Enterprises of Atlanta, has signed four Auburn players invited to the Senior Bowl and says he's in town partly to protect his interest.

Levine, who works in the Miami office of the law firm Shea and Gould, previously made contact with three Florida State players — Ronald Lewis, Dexter Carter and LeRoy Butler — and is here hoping to close a deal.

Eric Green (left) of Liberty University talks to sports agent David Levine of Miami.

"These are the only guys I have gone out with and given support to," Levine said. "Most of the guys here are small-time agents, guys who have no players and maybe don't have the experience to even represent a player. Those guys will go up to anybody and talk to them and take them out to dinner. Whatever a player would want to do with them, they would probably do."

Butler, who most scouts project as

AGENTS Continued on Back Page ▶

ATLANTA DATA

Rainfall Thursday	.33
Rainfall to date 1990	2.19
Normal rainfall	2.80
Rainfall this month	2.19
High Thursday	66
Low Thursday	58
Average temperature	63
Normal average	42
High one year ago today	62
Low one year ago today	40
Highest this date	69 (1950)
Lowest this date	1 (1977)
Sunrise today	7:41 a.m. EST
Sunset today	5:56 p.m. EST
Winds today	E 5-10 mph
Humidity Thursday	90%

METRO CONDITIONS

City	High	Low	Prop.
College Park	64	57	.00
Chamblee	66	59	.00
Marietta	65	58	.37
Mableton	66	59	.35
Downtown	69	63	NA

Data for period ending at 8 a.m. today

LAKE LEVELS

Lake	full level	level Thur.	24-hr. chng.
Allatoona	840.0	826.74	-0.13
Bartlett Ferry	521.0	509.90	0.00
Blackshear	237.0	236.59	-0.12
Blue Ridge	1690.0	1666.80	0.00
Burton	1865.0	1857.60	0.00
Carters	1072.0	1072.45	+0.20
Chatuge	1927.0	1915.70	-0.10
George	190.0	187.92	-0.25
Hartwell	660.0	657.99	-0.17
Jackson	530.0	521.90	-0.80
Lanier	1071.0	1070.57	-0.11
Notely	1779.0	1754.70	+0.10
Oconee	435.0	434.80	+0.20
Russell	475.0	476.38	-0.08
Seminole	77.5	77.42	0.00
Sinclair	339.8	338.60	-0.20
Thurmond	330.0	328.64	-0.07
Weiss	564.0	558.42	-0.14
West Point	635.0	623.44	-0.38

Levels in feet above mean sea level

MOON DATA

NEW MOON	FIRST QTR	FULL MOON	LAST QTR
Jan. 26	Feb. 2	Feb. 9	Feb. 17

Rises Friday: 1:22 a.m. Sets: 11:55 a.m.

THE WORLD

CITY	HI	LOW	CLR	CITY	HI	LOW	CLR
AMSTERDAM	51	39	CDY	CAIRO	57	43	CLR
ATHENS	61	59	CDY	LONDON	57	52	CLR
AUCKLAND	94	54	CDY	MADRID	55	52	CLR
BANGKOK	90	79	CLR	MANILA	84	64	CDY
BARRABADS	82	71	CLR	MEXICO CITY	77	42	CDY
BEIJING	30	09	CLR	MONTEVIDEO	39	19	CDY
BEIRUT	61	52	CDY	MOSCOW	27	25	CDY
BELGRADE	39	25	CLR	NAIROBI	79	69	CLR
BELMOPAN	75	64	CLR	NEW DELHI	79	70	CLR
BERMUDA	71	64	CLR	NEW YORK	79	50	CLR
BOGOTA	70	36	CDY	NICOSIA	63	39	CLR
BRISBANE	45	23	CLR	OSLO	45	41	CDY
BUDAPEST	44	35	CDY	ROME	104	81	CLR
BURGAS	88	55	RN	RIO	104	81	CLR
CURACAO	59	50	CDY	SAO PAULO	93	77	CDY
CALGARY	57	16	CLR	SANTAGO	88	52	CLR
CARACAS	79	64	CDY	SAN PAUL	93	77	CDY
COPENHAGEN	46	41	CLR	SEUL	39	36	CDY
DUBLIN	48	39	CLR	SINGAPORE	82	72	RN
FRANKFURT	52	30	CLR	STOCKHOLM	37	32	CLR
GENEVA	51	29	CLR	TOKYO	73	59	CLR
HANOVER	50	25	CLR	SYDNEY	73	59	CLR
HELSINKI	37	32	CDY	TEL AVIV	64	55	CDY
HONG KONG	63	50	CDY	TOKYO	50	32	CDY
ISTANBUL	54	39	CDY	TORONTO	43	39	CDY
JOBURG	79	57	CDY	VANCOUVER	50	43	CDY
KIEV	43	39	CDY	VIENNA	56	46	CLR
LIMA	78	67	CLR	WARSAW	NA	NA	NA

By I.J. Rosenberg
Staff writer

ATHENS — Georgia junior running back Rodney Hampton says he thinks the recent decision by Alabama linebacker Keith McCants to petition the NFL to enter the draft will open the door for other juniors to do so.

Hampton, who was set to announce last week that he would leave Georgia for the NFL, put off his decision because he was concerned the league will take legal measures to prevent juniors from entering the draft. McCants, expected to be the top pick in the draft, would be the most likely point man for a court battle.

Said Hampton, "The legal stuff does concern me, but I do think Keith will make a difference. You'll see some [juniors] coming out now."

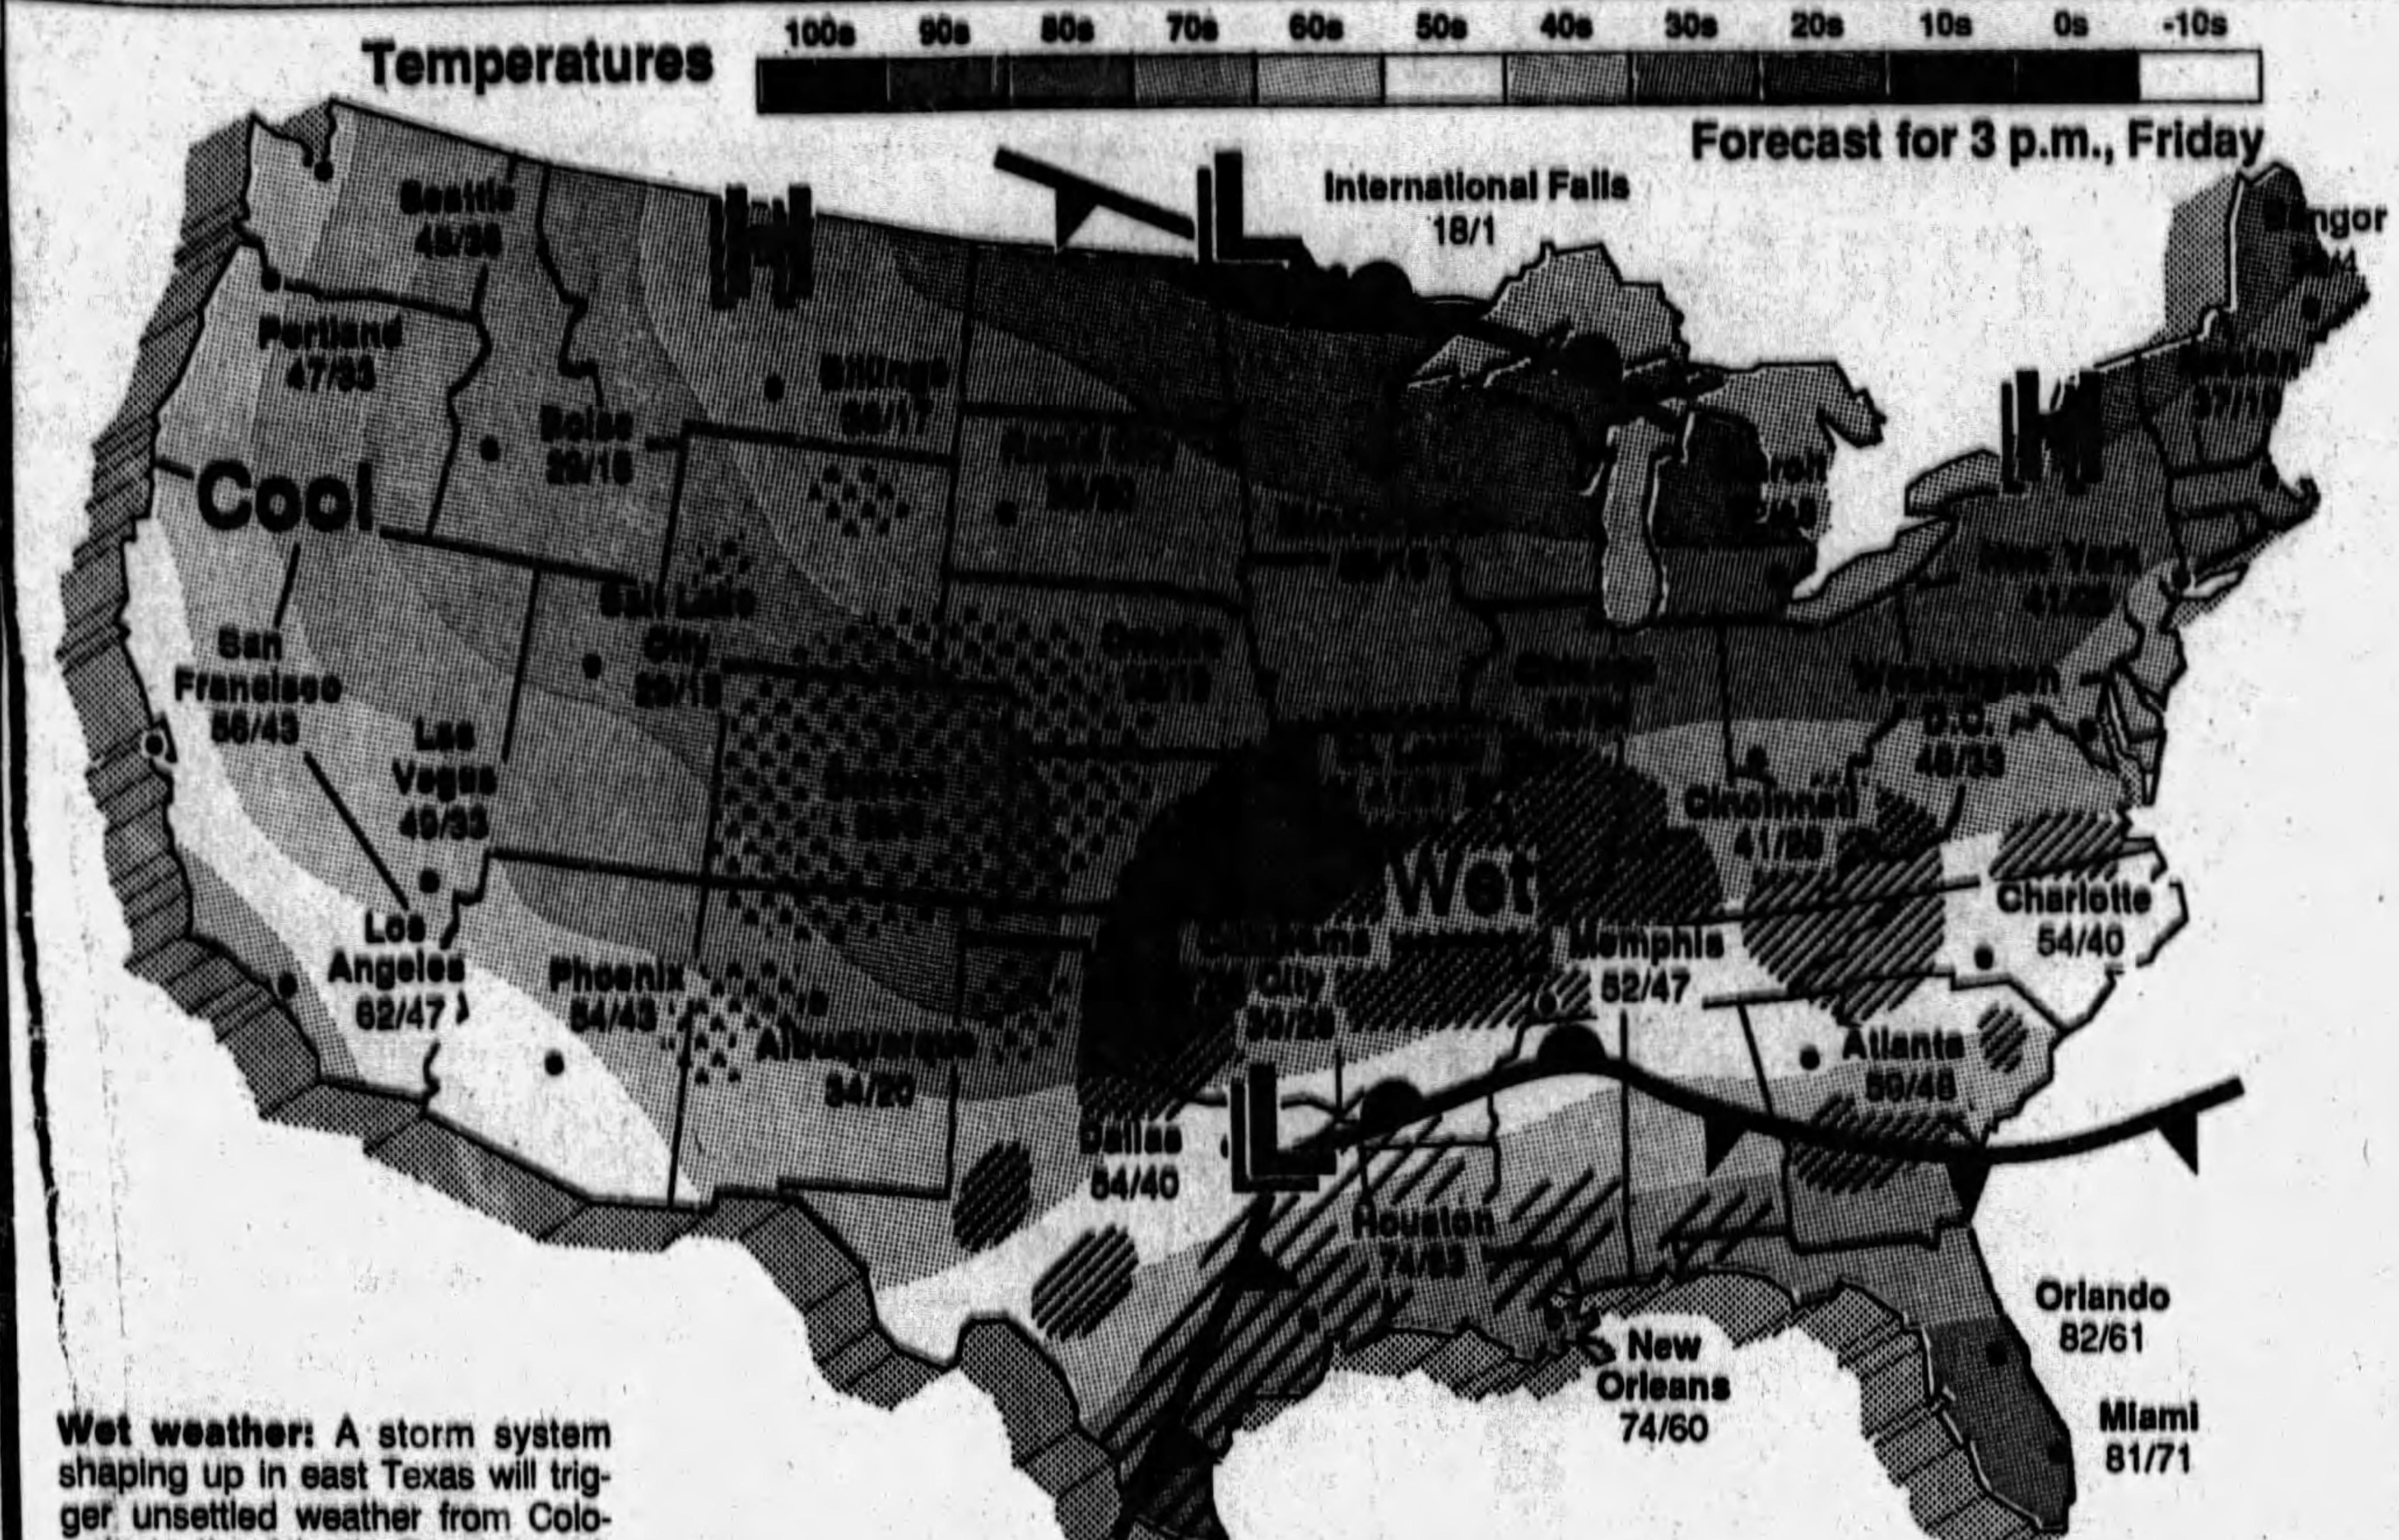

Hampton, however, said he is not ready to make his decision public.

"I have no time frame at this point," said Georgia's No. 3 all-time leading rusher. "I don't want to rush anything."

Hampton may wait until as late as April 9, when his petition to enter the draft must be in the NFL offices. As many as 26 juniors are considering giving up their last year of college eligibility, including running backs Emmitt Smith of Florida and Terry Allen of Clemson.

Wet weather: A storm system shaping up in east Texas will trigger unsettled weather from Colorado to the Atlantic Coast this afternoon. Widespread rain is forecast north of the front, while scattered thunderstorms are likely to the south, along the Gulf Coast.

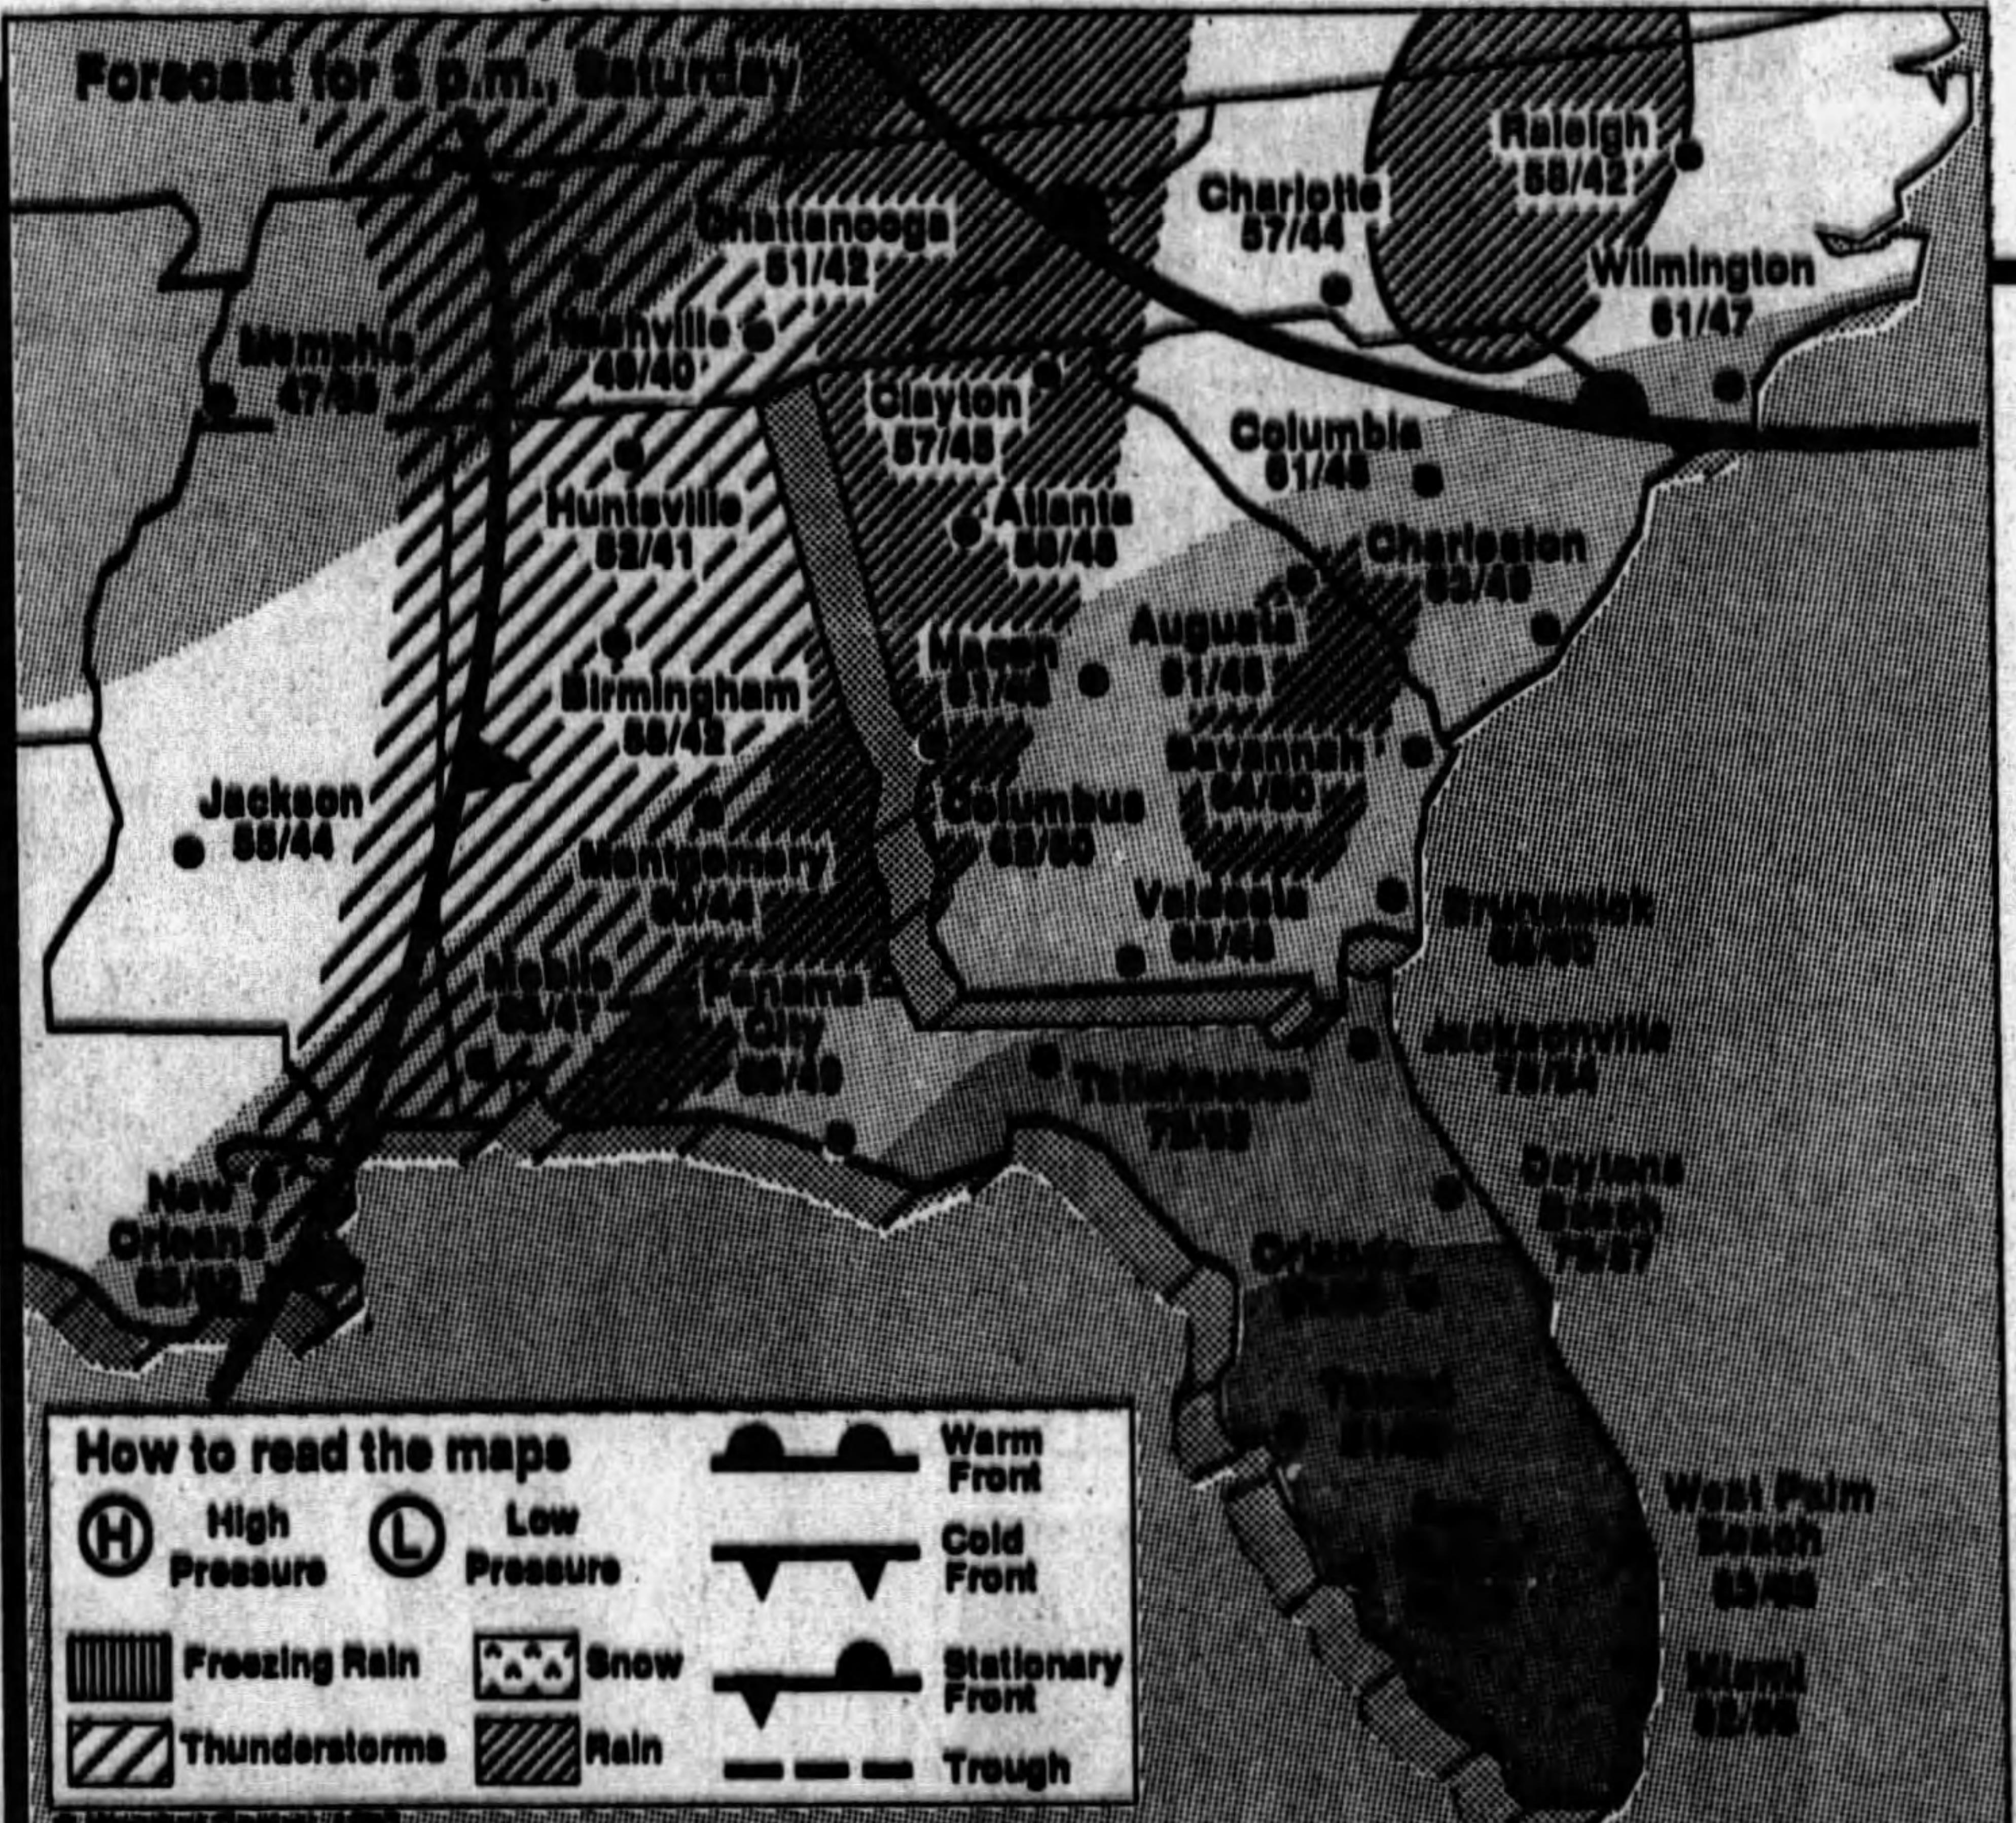

Behind the storm system northerly winds will draw a cold air mass into the southern Plains, bringing more snow to the area.

ATLANTA AREA FORECAST

- Today: Mostly cloudy with scattered showers. High 59. Low in the mid-50s.
- Saturday: Cloudy with a chance of rain and thundershowers. High 58. Low near 50.

FIVE-DAY STATE FORECAST

- Today: Cloudy with rain north. Partly cloudy south. Highs from the mid-50s north to the low 70s south. Lows from near 50 to the low 60s.
- Saturday: Cloudy and cool with a chance of showers and thunderstorms north. Highs in the mid-50s to near 70. Lows from the low 40s north to near 60 south.
- Sunday: Clearing, windy and cooler. Highs in the upper 40s north to the mid-50s south. Lows from 20s northwest to mid-30s south.
- Monday: Mostly sunny. Highs in the low 50s to low 60s. Lows ranging from the 20s in the northeast to the low 30s in the south.
- Tuesday: Continued sunny. Highs from the upper 50s north to the mid-60s south. Lows from the 20s north to the mid-30s south.

How to read the maps
High Pressure Low Pressure
Freezing Rain Snow
Thunderstorms Rain
Warm Front Cold Front
Stationary Front Trough
Frontal BoundaryWest Palm Beach 63°F
Miami 73°F
Daytona Beach 63°F
Jacksonville 74°F
Tampa 74°F
Tucson 63°F
Waco 63°F
Washington DC 68°F
Wichita Falls 59°F
Wilmington DE 56°F

FOR TIME, WEATHER &amp; TRAVEL FORECASTS, CALL 222-2040

Hampton: McCants will open NFL doors

By I.J. Rosenberg
Staff writer

Georgia's Rodney Hampton says he has "no time frame" for making public his decision whether to enter the NFL draft.

They all say the same thing: "I'm the best at what I do and I can get you the best deal," Butler said.

Most reputable agents, like Leigh Steinberg, Jim Sexton and Bob Woolf, distance themselves from the mass hustle of Senior Bowl week.

"It's embarrassing to be seen in the lobby," Sexton said. "People assume you're like all the rest."

"This is absurd," Steinberg said. "An athlete shouldn't be a commodity to be bought and sold. Money shouldn't be a part of it."

But it has been, it is, and probably will continue to be.

The front men, the recruiters like Terry Bolar, are still around. Bolar has a reputation for handing players cash to lure them to an agent. He's been a recruiter for the likes of Norby Walters, Lloyd Bloom and Ray Newman — all of whom have admitted giving money to players.

Agents Howard Mistle and former Heisman Trophy winner Johnny Rodgers face charges in Texas after allegedly violating state laws by buying a fur coat and offering money to the mother of University of Houston quarterback Andre Ware, a junior and this year's Heisman Trophy recipient.

"People say the business is getting better. If anything, this stuff has increased," said Richard Woods. "It's like the copy-cat killer. People get ideas about being agents and they go out and do all these crazy things."

Woods, whose claim to fame is that he represents Bo Jackson, lives in Mobile but keeps his distance from the Senior Bowl scene. In defense of his hometown, he says the same kind of activities take place at other major college all-star games and at the NFL scouting combine in Indianapolis.

"I don't think there's anything disreputable about going to the games," Woods said. "But you see guys going up and down the hotel halls knocking on doors. These Dr. Da-i Ping, an acupuncturist and agent from Ann Arbor, Mich., agrees.

"If I feel there is a flaw in the character, I'm not interested," Ping said. "If you don't have good quality kids, you're asking for trouble in the future. He can play football all he wants, but if he has poor character, the sucker is going to be in jail half the time."

Continued from F1

A second-round pick, has been a hot target for agents. In a two-hour period Wednesday between the end of practice and dinner, Butler said he received at least 20 calls from agents.

"They all say the same thing: 'I'm the best at what I do and I can get you the best deal,'" Butler said.

Most reputable agents, like Leigh Steinberg, Jim Sexton and Bob Woolf, distance themselves from the mass hustle of Senior Bowl week.

"It's embarrassing to be seen in the lobby," Sexton said. "People assume you're like all the rest."

"This is absurd," Steinberg said. "An athlete shouldn't be a commodity to be bought and sold. Money shouldn't be a part of it."

But it has been, it is, and probably will continue to be.

The front men, the recruiters like Terry Bolar, are still around. Bolar has a reputation for handing players cash to lure them to an agent. He's been a recruiter for the likes of Norby Walters, Lloyd Bloom and Ray Newman —

TRAVELERS FORECASTS FOR U.S. CITIES

City	Thursday	Friday	Saturday	Sunday

<tbl_r cells="5