

Ready to throw long, sophomore Chuck Long passes against the Tennessee defense in the 1982 Peach Bowl. An estimated 20,000 Hawkeye fans followed the team to Atlanta, Ga., for the big game.
Under construction, the Carver-Hawkeye Sports Arena is being built to replace the aging Field House for sporting events. The new arena has an estimated seating capacity of over 15,000, with none of the seats having an obstructed view.

Visiting lecturers, such as Simon Wiesenthal, John Irving and Eldridge Cleaver brought a wide variety of issues to campus. The computing center was a source of challenge — using the computer wasn't difficult, but fighting the crowds was.

True, you may have had less comfort and security at school than you had at home, but you had more freedom — the freedom to make your own mistakes as well as successes.

The university itself did more with less in 1983. Despite reduced funding for universities across the country, the UI was still able to complete the Carver sports arena, start the new Communications Building, make plans for other structures on campus, such as the new Law Center, and grant the English Department's request for the costly purchase of the BBC's video tape productions of the Shakespeare plays.

An old familiar sight gets some new remodelling as safety ropes are attached to the Old Capitol dome.

The return of a classic

Homecoming is a tradition almost as old as the university itself. But almost no year has seen as much renewed interest and enthusiasm as 1983. "It was a touching sight to see," said 1982 Homecoming committee chairman Hope Truckemiller. "The students, the alumni, the community — they all were there. It was a time when the generations united."

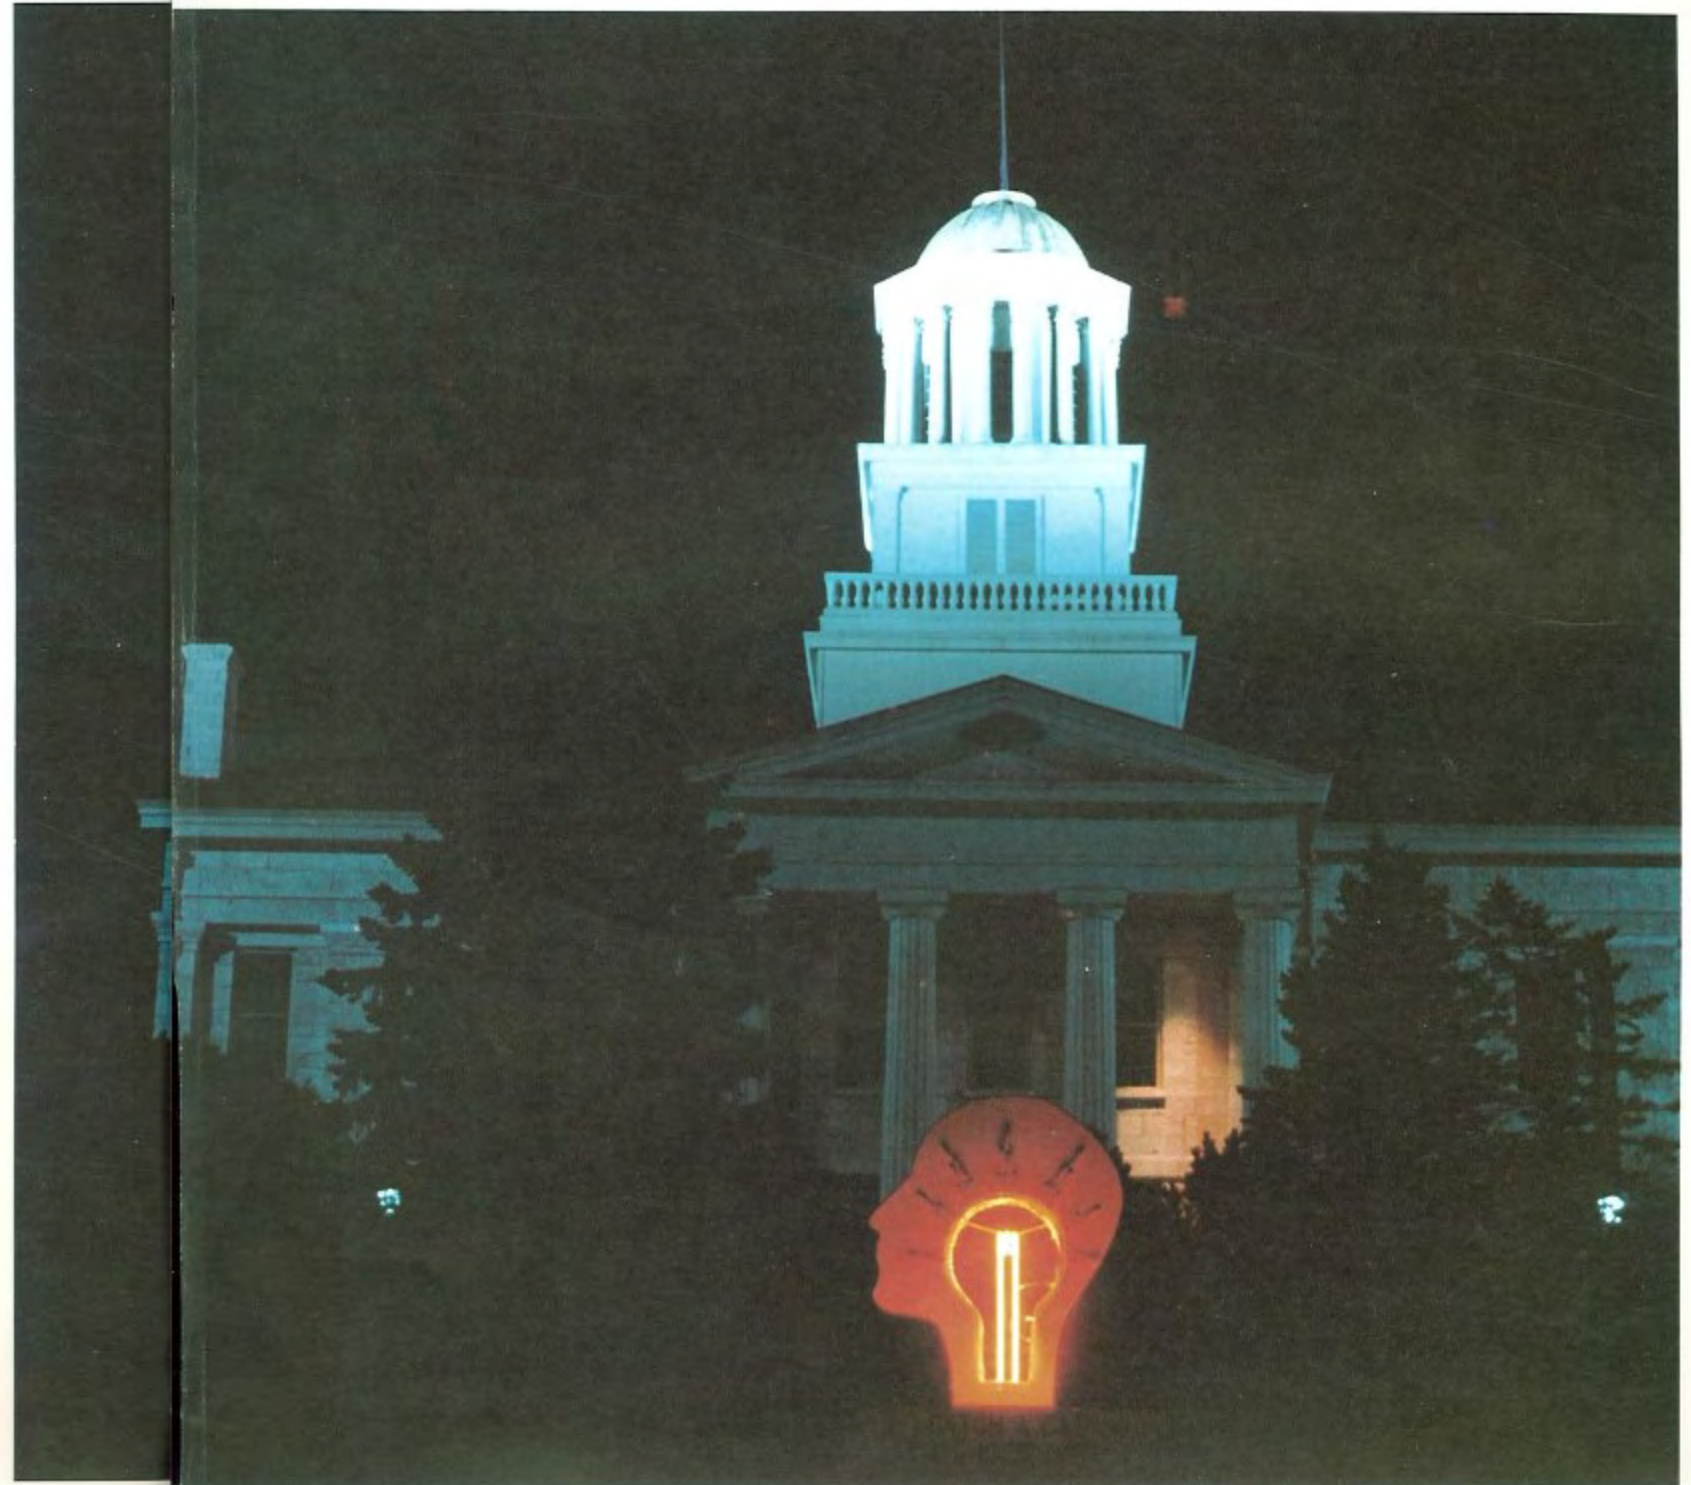

Returning to the field after being sidelined the previous year with a neck injury, sophomore Treye Jackson is ready for the 1982 Iowa Homecoming game, in which the Hawks easily dispatched the Northwestern Wildcats 45-7.

The return of a classic

The tradition returned. Homecoming reunited alumni with their school and friends; students and community members shared in the celebration.

Bill Allard, Dan Coffey, Jim Turner, Leon Martel and Merle Kessler of Duck's Breath Mystery Theatre packed E.C. Mabie theatre for five consecutive nights during their yearly return to their alma mater. The San Francisco-based troupe was excited by its West Coast acclaim and has ventured into new mediums, such as television (starring in a special for Iowa Public Television) and film (a movie being shot in Colorado).

During their stay, the group tried out some new material, such as the story of "Livestock Nation."

"The audience decides our act," explained Coffey. "If they laugh at something, we keep it in."

Another returning alumna was honored guest Mary Beth Hurt, co-star of the movie version of John Irving's novel, "The World According to Garp."

Hurt, originally from Marshalltown, IA, attended the University of Iowa from 1964-69.

"I think that I started to act because I thought I was a failure as a human being," she said. "But acting is just a job. It's incredibly boring to make a movie. There are long days: 12, 13, 14 hours, and about 10 of those are spent waiting around for the lights to be set."

When asked where is the best place to start in show business, Hurt answered, "Wherever you are, that's the best place to start. I liked growing up in the Midwest; it left so much room for imagination."

The week also saw the return of some favorite Homecoming events. In the ice cream eating contest, each member of a team of eight had to devour a scoop of ice cream, without hands, and flip the empty bowl over with their mouths. Later in the week, there were a dunking booth and hot air balloon rides on the Union field.

Of course, the traditional Homecoming Parade rolled down the streets of Iowa City Friday evening, followed by the Homecoming dance and the announcement of the 1982 Homecoming king and queen at the IMU.

Sponsored by Mortar Board and Omicron Delta Kappa, this year's contest was carried out a little more prestigiously than previously, with crowns for the winners instead of cowboy hats. Second year medical student Mary Guhin and senior Jeff Emrich were elected queen and king for the year, during which they spoke to various groups, including the Johnson County I-Club and the Rotary Club.

Finally, at Saturday's game, another tradition continued: the Iowa Hawkeyes devastated the Northwestern Wildcats 45-7.

Everything is coming up peaches

Although young and untested, the University of Iowa football team once again finished with a record of 8-4. After two consecutive defeats, the Hawks regrouped to capture eight of their last 10 games, including a Peach Bowl triumph over the Tennessee Volunteers.

The season began in Lincoln, Neb., where the Cornhuskers devastated the Hawks 42-7. After the game, head coach Hayden Fry said, "We left a lot to be desired. Hopefully, a lot of our young people grew up today. I just hope time doesn't run out before we become a fine team."

In the opening home battle, Iowa's offense was once again ineffective, and the Hawks were defeated by Iowa State, 19-7. Iowa's lone touchdown came on junior Tony Wancket's 29-yard pass interception.

Playing a night game at Arizona, the Hawks defeated the Wildcats, 17-14, behind the play of sophomore quarterback Chuck Long. The following week, homecoming fans enjoyed a high-scoring win as Iowa romped over Northwestern, 45-7. Long threw touchdown passes to Moritz and sophomore Eddie Phillips, and Nichol kicked a 49-yard field goal to help secure the victory.

Iowa's next outing at Indiana was decided on the last play of the game. Hawkeye freshman defensive back Devon Mitchell made a game-saving tackle on Indiana's Scott McNabb at the Iowa two-yard line to preserve the victory. Junior Norm Granger was named most valuable player of the regionally televised game after catching four passes for 90 yards, including a 63-yard touchdown reception.

The Hawkeye's next opponent, Michigan, came into Kinnick Stadium and snapped Iowa's three game winning streak by defeating the Hawks, 29-7. The turning point came in the second quarter when Iowa threatened to take the lead. The Hawks were driving, but a fumble on the Michigan one-yard line stymied the drive. After that, it was Michigan's game as the Wolverines took a 12-0 half-time lead and built it to 29-0 before Long passed to junior tight-end Mike Hufford in the end zone for Iowa's only score late in the fourth period.

Led by Phillips, who gained 198 yards and scored a touchdown, the Hawkeyes defeated Minnesota, 21-16, for the first time since 1977. The next week, the Hawkeyes treated a sellout crowd and a regional television audience to an assortment of trick plays in defeating Illinois and highly touted quarterback Tony Eason, 14-13.

"He was our inspiration and a real leader," said coach Hayden Fry about football captain Bobby Stoops who led the defensive squad in one of its most surprising seasons.

Peaches

Fighting for a few yards, Owen Gill plows through Tennessee defenders behind Norm Granger's blocking in the 1982 Peach Bowl.

Iowa then suffered its 12th straight loss at Purdue's Ross-Ade Stadium, bowing to the Boilermakers, 16-7. The loss also proved costly to the Hawks as Phillips, the leading ground-gainer, was lost for the rest of the regular season with a knee injury.

In the Wisconsin game, Badger Troy King carried the ball 80 yards for a touchdown on the first play of the game. Gill, filling in for the injured Phillips, lead Iowa to a 28-14 victory over the Badgers.

Iowa earned a Peach Bowl berth in the last regular season game by downing Michigan State, 24-18. With the victory, Iowa ended the regular season, 7-4. Their 6-2 Big Ten mark was good for third place, far ahead of their projected seventh place finish.

Long and Moritz set Peach Bowl records in leading the Hawks to a 28-22 victory over Tennessee on New Year's Eve. The Volunteers scored first, but then Iowa reeled off 21 second quarter points to take a 21-7 half-time lead. Long, who also threw two touchdown passes to Harmon, completed 19-26 passes for 304 yards, setting a Peach Bowl record.

As estimated 20,000 Iowa fans who followed the Hawks to Atlanta saw Iowa halt the final Volunteer drive when junior Tony Wancket tackled Tennessee quarterback Alan Cockerell for a loss in the final minutes of the game.

Early in the season, Fry had feared there may not be enough time for the Hawks to become a fine football team. But, with each victory, these fears were dismissed. "This was a great season for a young team," Fry said. "I'm optimistic about the future."
